Democrats Will Dictate Debts

Germany Hears People's Voice

New York City Acclaims McKee

Prince of Wales Beats a Drum

Indian Parley Feels Gandhi

Lincoln's Salem Lives Again

PRESIDENT-ELECT ROOSEVELT will confer with President Hoover on international debts on Nov. 22. Prof. Raymond Moley of Columbia University, economic adviser, will accompany Governor Roosevelt. On the following day the President will receive members of leading Congressional committees to discuss plans. The prospect is that later a review of the debts, by commission or otherwise, will be granted by the Democratic majority. That Congress will agree to postpone the Dec. 15 payments is extremely doubtful. The State Department weighs the consequences of a refusal of the debtor nations' request—Settlement of other international problems, it is held, will be retarded.

¶ Germany moves slowly in its effort to find a more stable Government. President von Hindenburg, withholding action on the resignation of the von Papen Cabinet, receives leaders of the several parties. Adolf Hitler comes from Munich by airplane. The Hitlerites can have minor places, but not the Chancellorship. Geneva and Paris watch with profound interest. Paris newspapers see a still unsmothered democracy forcing von Papen to resign, proving that no Cabinet can last against public opinion. Perhaps Germany is again facing about—Will the monarchists go down before an upspringing of the almost throttled Republic?

¶ New York City's forces of decency start a wild rally to Joseph V. McKee, Acting Mayor, to lead them against the Tammany tiger. The movement is the outcome of a State Chamber of Commerce dinner at the Waldorf at which Mr. McKee, all unexpectedly, launches an attack on Tammany and its misrule of one of the world's greatest cities and calls on all decent citizens to unite to save their town. More than 130,000 voters wrote in McKee's name on their ballots, thrusting leadership upon him. The campaign is on from now—New York girds itself to sweep out Tammany Mayor O'Brien with McKee next fall.

¶ The Prince of Wales startles and delights Northern Ireland. After his dedication of the new Parliament buildings, protected by 12,000 soldiers and guards, the Prince is entertained at strongly guarded Hillsborough Castle. But he slips away from the evening party to join a noisy celebration in Hillsborough village. Being recognized, he seizes a big goatskin drum and shows himself a wizard with the sticks. After he has braved every lurking radical danger, a cheering crowd escorts him back to the castle. There may be reason enough to mistrust Irish hotheads—But the Prince is a broth of a boy who can take care of himself.

¶ Japan undertakes the difficult, delicate business of crushing the uprising at Manchuli. Almost in sight of the Soviet border troops, Gen. Su Ping-wen and his revolting Manchukuo railway guards defy Japanese rule and hold more than 100 Japanese business men as hostages. Argument and bribery not moving General Su, a cautious offensive begins. General Muto is forced to send an army into dangerous border ground. Tokyo doesn't wish to sour the Soviet—But it heeds the loud home howl that Japan must save its face.

¶ London sees the third Round Table on India convene with 40 delegates. Prime Minister MacDonald extends welcome, and the Aga Khan, a noted leader of the Moslems, replies that they are there to draw up a Constitution that will really work and at the same time satisfy the aspirations of the Indian people. The conference, being small and determined, is expected to move swiftly. The problem of equitable franchise for Hindu castes and untouchables comes up soon. Mahatma Gandhi is in jail in far-away India—But his mighty shadow falls athwart all that goes on in London.

¶ Illinois begins to rebuild New Salem, where Abraham Lincoln spent six years of his early manhood. To the hamlet on the bluff overlooking the Sangamon River came the lanky young flatboatman. Here he clerked, became a store-owner, studied law at night, met, loved and lost Ann Rutledge, and was elected to the Illinois General Assembly. Completely restored will be the quaint, beautiful setting of the formative period of a great career. The world will visit the strange little huts and marvel that from such a cradle such a man could come. New New Salem will be a tribute to Lincoln—But more, even, it will be a tribute to the unlimited impulse and possibility in American life.

Japan's Brusque Talk on East Held Plan to Impress League

Matsuoka, Arriving at Geneva, Says No Change Can Be Made in Policy on Manchuria—Concessions, However, Held Possible

By Cable from The Christian Science Monitor Bureau

GENEVA, Nov. 18—Reaffirming in forceful language Japan's determination to maintain the present régime in Manchuria, the special delegation to the League of Nations led by Mr. Yosuke Matsuoka arrived here today.

With only three days remaining before the League Council begins its consideration of the Lytton report, Japanese support of the Manchukuo régime shows no sign of weakening. "We intend this new experiment to be continued," says the official statement prepared by Mr. Matsuoka. "This policy is reasonable and natural, and I hope the League of Nations will understand that under present circumstances there is no other course that Japan can take."

The general impression here is that the Japanese have assumed an intransigent attitude as the most suitable strategy at the opening of the great debates now impending before the Council and Assembly here. It is not necessary to assume that, as the situation develops, Japan will not be prepared to make some concessions.

In an interview given to the press Mr. Matsuoka developed the theme that the Japanese troops did not enter Manchuria as aggressors, but as defenders of their unquestionable rights. "Japan's cause is not opposed to that of other nations, he declared, not even to that of the Chinese themselves."

New Japanese Drive Against Manchurians Described as Bluff

TOKYO, Nov. 18—The vernacular press reports that Japanese forces, which have been concentrating at Paichuan, 100 miles east of Tsitsihar, have started a general offensive against the anti-Manchukuo forces, including those of Gen. Su Ping-wen in the northwest, expecting that an

NECESSITY SEEN FOR UNIVERSITY TO REMAIN FREE

Dr. Butler of Columbia Says, However, It Must Not Trample Public

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 18—Universities must guard their freedom, recognize their responsibility to society, provide leaders who can "interpret the present in the perspective of history and judgment and decide which of the paths offered are highways along which it is possible to travel," according to speakers at the dinner session which closed the three-day conference of universities at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel last night.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University; Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary, and Mr. Walter Lippman, editor, spoke on "The University in This Changing World." Dr. Elmer Ellsworth Brown, chancellor of New York University, under the auspices of which the conference was called, summed up the findings of the general and discussions sessions.

The university, Dr. Butler said, of all fundamental institutions of men, is best adapted to adjust itself to the changing conditions of a changing world and to carry on the important functions of conserving knowledge, advancing knowledge and interpreting knowledge.

"To do this the university must be free, it must protect its freedom and exercise its freedom so as to increase, not diminish, its authority," he continued. "It must learn by experience that the present is the invisible bridge over which the achievements of the past walk toward the shaping of the undetermined future.

Must Be Liberal

"Because of its freedom, the university is under obligation to society. It must know the changing world and shape the changing world, and to do this it must be liberal."

Emphasizing the importance of spiritual values in university training, Dr. Coffin declared that the chief aim of university courses which lead students to scrutinize and assess contemporary conditions dispassionately should be to detach them from the groups in which they have been reared and to make them keen critics of their society.

"If they are to live and do business on Main Street, it is the uni-

'AD MEN' URGED TO DISCOURAGE RUBBER MONEY

Government Economy and Sound Currency Held Vital to Recovery

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 18—A plea for sound money and against anything resembling currency inflation featured an address by Mr. Hugh Bancroft, president of Dow, Jones & Co., New York publishers, before the Association of National Advertisers here today. He held that while the crises in the economic recession had been passed, there was danger in the insistent demand for paper money inflation.

"The threat of free silver to the soundness of our financial structure was not a circumstance," he said, "to the threat contained in the bonus bill which actually passed the lower House at the last session of Congress, and which proposed the issue of $2,300,000,000 of paper money to pay legionnaires that amount in excess of what is now due them."

Mr. Bancroft said latest authoritative estimates placed the national income this year at $37,500,000,000 and that the total cost of federal, state and municipal government was fully $15,000,000,000.

"In whatever shape it may be paid over to government," he said, "this vast sum must come out of the gross receipts of business. The cost of government is now a major cost of doing business. All other costs have been and are being radically adjusted downward."

Mr. Bancroft held that the Democratic platform demand for a 25 per cent cut in government cost could "be accomplished only after the chief indoor sport of all congressmen of all parts is abruptly terminated."

"I refer, of course, to their practice of extorting money from taxpayers to give it away where there are votes," he declared.

"Our recent Congresses have made a lot of talk about economy in relative trivialities," he said, "but all of them—Democrats and Republicans alike—have voted to give away $450,000,000 a year for nonservice disabilities, mostly to men who never were under fire, and have voted to give away hundreds of millions of dollars to various states on a 50-50 basis, encouraging the states, in turn to extort other hundreds of millions from the taxpayers to be spent for extravagant and unnecessary purposes."

A world-wide advertising campaign to provide peace for all time and thereby eradicate the "smothering taxes," which he declared wars levy upon the nations, was the plea of Mr. Bennett Chapple of Middletown, Ohio, vice-president of the American Rolling Mill Company, before the association at the meeting yesterday. He held that the average American is giving three months of his income every year in taxes, most of which are the direct or indirect result of war. Mr. Chapple said he addressed the convention as a representative of the World Peaceways, of which he was one of the organizers.

Another feature address was by Mr. Ralph Starr Butler of New York, vice-president of General Foods Corporation, who told the convention that quality—not quantity—of circulation should be the basis of advertising rates.

Mule Trail Yields To Bolivian Road

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18—A dream of a decade comes true in Bolivia. An old mule trail, narrow and tortuous, has widened to a highway, firm and passable, connecting two cities, La Paz and Cochabama, 300 miles apart.

The winding course for mule and llama caravans took two weeks for the journey that now an automobile can make in two days. And while a railway route competed with the twisting path, the cost was high, for fuel and oil are imported by Bolivia. So the trail took most of the trade, while Bolivians dreamed of a time when travel might be less arduous.

Slowly, additional links of the great Pan-American highway, to connect the farthest tip of South America with New York if plans are realized, become realities. And further, this section of Bolivia, where the new road climbs, not only opens a faster route into the heart of the continent but offers, to the immigrants traveling its course, promising fields of labor.

La Paz, the capital, with 143,000 population, is 12,000 feet above sea level in a great Andean ravine. Large mining enterprises maintain offices in the city. Cochabama, 8000 feet above the coast, with a population of 36,000 persons, is in the center of wide agricultural and grazing enterprises.

SEAWAY ARGUED IN NEW ENGLAND COUNCIL SESSION

Harriman and Merrill Take Opposite Sides in the Controversy

Welfare of the railroads loomed large in opposition to the proposed St. Lawrence Seaway, as the closing session of the Eighth New England Conference resolved itself into the destinies of waterways and the railroads.

In lonesome defense of the proposed waterway, Mr. Henry I. Harriman, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, said no established investment can permanently stand in the way of new and improved processes. If, as he contended would be the case, the seaway would result in lowered freight rates between the middle West and the Atlantic Ocean, an efficiency is involved, according to him, that the people are entitled to.

Mr. Harriman was opposed by Mr. Henry F. Merrill, president of the board of directors of the Port of Portland, Maine, and the upholder of the negative in the joint debate on the St. Lawrence issue. In addition Mr. John J. Pelley, president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, in his address, condemned the project as an uneconomic burden on the taxpayer, likely to cost $36,000,000 yearly for upkeep. It would be competing with the New York State Barge Canal, would be frozen a large part of the year and would result in higher railroad rates, he said.

Growth of Traffic

Mr. Harriman said the growth of traffic during the 10 years required to complete the seaway would largely compensate the railroads for the ultimate loss of traffic. The problem is not one of nurturing any one form of transportation, he said, but rather is it one of supplying the nation with a coördinated system of transportation wherein each carrier shall do the work it is best suited to perform.

"The St. Lawrence Seaway would mean," he said, "first, lower transportation costs on food supplies, hence a lower cost of living; second, lower freight rates on many of the raw materials required by New Eng-

Juvenile Crime Called Poverty's Hungry Comrade

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

MANCHESTER, Eng.—From a report recently laid before the Manchester Education Committee by officers of the department who have been investigating the nature and causes of crime among children, it becomes evident that industrial recession is the mainspring from which trouble arises.

Of the 172 children who appeared in the juvenile courts of Manchester between January and June of this year, 25 per cent came from homes where the weekly family income has averaged under five shillings for each member, while 21 per cent came from homes with a weekly income for each membr between five and eight shillings.

The researches prove that poverty, and the effects of poverty upon the outlook of the family, are responsible chiefly for the rising crime figures among children. That a child who knows lack at home is prone to follow an enterprising leader to deeds of more or less adventurous wickedness, has been shown. They suggest that slum clearance and the provision of more playing-fields would definitely aid in the prevention of crime.

War's Trail of Debt

UNTIL April, 1917, Britain was general creditor; some nations had borrowed from America. After April, 1917, when America entered the war, war costs strained allied resources to the breaking point. America came to the rescue with loans totaling about $10,338,000,000 between then and Nov. 30, 1920.

Sept. 26, 1919, Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass, in view of the fact that interest on American loans was all being paid out of new loans, announced a moratorium on interest payments for about three years.

In 1922, Britain, in the Balfour note, suggested a general debt cancellation, which came to nothing.

In 1922 the Glass moratorium expired. Britain alone resumed payments.

June 19, 1923, Britain, first of the big powers, signed an agreement to pay the full amount and arrears in 62 annual payments (due Dec. 15), with semiannual interest payments at an average interest of 3.3 per cent for the whole period. France signed the debt agreement, April, 1926, with no interest for five years and average interest for the whole period of 1.6 per cent. Italy signed in 1925, with average interest of 0.4 per cent.

In 1931 the whole financial structure collapsed. The allied powers had made regular payments to America. The money for these came largely from German reparations. The money for German reparations was largely lent by America. At the time when America stopped lending private money to Germany, early in 1931, Germany collapsed and the general breakdown came.

June 30, 1931, the Hoover moratorium went into effect. Britain up till then had paid $1,911,798,299; France, $486,075,891, and Italy $97,584,422.

June 31, 1932, the Lausanne Conference, proposed by Britain, scaled down German annual payments from upward of $386,000,000 to nothing for the following three years, afterward approximately $43,000,000. By this plan the main debtor nations sacrificed the reparations money with which they had paid their debts. They are now seeking a general debt revision.

Hoover To Call Debt Caucus Following Roosevelt Meeting

Will Confer With Congressional Leaders and Ranking Members of Finance Groups of Both Houses—Light Breaking Through

By ERWIN D. CANHAM

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18—Tangible chances for an ultimately constructive and statesmanlike handling of the inter-ally debt controversy began to emerge here today out of the clouds of political uncertainty, although there appears still to be little probability of averting serious difficulty over the Dec. 15 payments.

With plans for the Hoover-Roosevelt interview next Tuesday, Nov. 22, fixed in an agreeably intimate telephone call between the two leaders—who years ago were close personal friends—President Hoover was able to go ahead and arrange for a conference with congressional leaders on the following day, bringing together Administration chiefs and the three ranking Republican and Democratic members of the finance committees in both houses.

As a result of these two meetings, it is expected that tentative agreement will develop pointing to future discussion and revision of the debts. Both President Hoover and President-elect Roosevelt are committed to this reëxamination in varied forms. President Hoover wished it to take place through reëstablishment of the Congressional Debt Funding Commission, before which European debtors could appear separately and present their cases for revision.

Congress Holds Power

Governor Roosevelt, on the other hand, campaigned for a new world economic readjustment, in which debts should be studied along with tariffs and general trade factors, presumably at the forthcoming world economic conference. But since Congress holds authority over all debt settlements, some form of congressional committee to formulate a policy for such international contacts as Governor Roosevelt favors would be needed, and there is therefore no fundamental contradiction between the President-elect's ideas and those of President Hoover for a debt-funding commission. Procedures are different, and the Democratic leader would go further in coupling debts with other factors, but essentially the two policies attempt to reach the same goal by varying routes.

Although large sections of Congress have hitherto been opposed to any single revisionary step on debts it is felt that the concession made to their views in insisting on no moratorium for the Dec. 15 payments will secure their approval on the broader issue.

Responsibility for dealing with or standing pat on the Dec. 15 payments rests on the present Congress

Chile Opposes Term 'Socialist' For Republic

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile—The present Chilean Government, after consultation with President-Elect Alessandri, who takes office in the new year, has issued a statement deprecating the use of the term "Chilean Socialist Republic." In future, it indicated, Chile will be just an ordinary republic, as before.

Simultaneously it ordered the derogation of the decree law issued by the Davila government establishing a central committee of Socialist propaganda dependent on the Ministry of Education. The object of this organization was to "combat capitalist ideas propagated by the press and by former governments." Later this committee was transferred to the Ministry of Labor under the name of the "department of sociological and cultural extension."

The staff consisted of a departmental chief with a salary of $24,000 per year, four subordinates with $15,000, a secretary with $12,000, two inspectors of Socialist drama with $10,000 and 10 minor officials.

The whole salary expenditure contemplated on this peculiar institution was $200,000 per annum. The organization was appointed by a "reserve decree" which was discovered only when a detailed financial investigation was made into acts of the Socialist dictatorship.

Amy Johnson Beats Husband's Mark From London to Cape Town by 11 Hours

Captain Mollison Flew Over Europe and Africa in 4 Days 17 Hours

CAPE TOWN, Nov. 18 (AP) — Miss Amy Johnson, flying alone from England, landed here at 1:30 p. m., Greenwich time, (5:30 a. m. E. S. T.) today, clipping nearly 11 hours off the speed record held by her husband, Capt. James A. Mollison.

Last March Captain Mollison made the trip in 4 days 17 hours and 19 minutes. His wife's time was 4 days, 6 hours and 55 minutes, or 10 hours and 24 minutes faster than his.

She brought her small monoplane, "Desert Cloud," down to a skillful landing to the accompaniment of shrieking motor horns and the cheers of 2000 persons waiting to greet her.

Miss Johnson covered the 6250 miles from England with only four stops. The first was at Oran in Algeria, whence she flew 1500 miles across the Sahara Desert to Gao in Portuguese West Africa. Then she followed the coastline to Benguela, landed there and at Mossamedes, her last stop before reaching here.

Between Benguela and Mossamedes yesterday her plane developed trouble in the oil lines, and it looked for a while as though she would have to quit. She adjusted the feed line, however, at Mossamedes and lost only a little time.

Miss Johnson had weather trouble, too, for along a 1000-mile stretch there was torrential rain which made it impossible for her to see much more than the line of breakers marking the coast. She flew low along that line, occasionally pulling up sharply to get over the cliffs that appeared suddenly through the rain and fog.

She was surprisingly fresh when she stepped out of the plane today.

"Thank you very much for this great welcome," she said, "I said I would come back and here I am."

She posed for the photographers and then the Mayor and his wife and the rest of the official reception committee escorted her to an automobile.

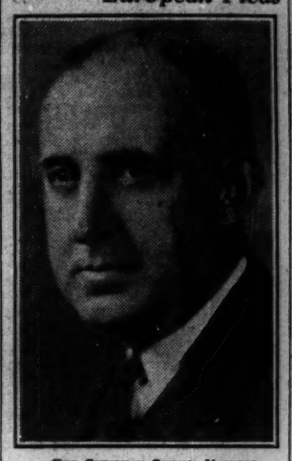
Note on War Debt Deferred by Italy

By Cable from Monitor Bureau

ROME, Nov. 18 — The Italian Government has not yet requested American extension of the debt moratorium and the question whether to address a note to Washington similar to that sent by Great Britain, France and Belgium is still under consideration.

Italian official circles maintain the utmost reserve on the whole subject, but owing to the cold reception in the United States of the British and French notes, it is more likely that the Italian Government will refrain at least for the present from joining its former allies in their request.

His Eye to Scan European Pleas



THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

RAYMOND MOLEY

Expert to Aid Roosevelt At Hoover Parley

Columbia Professor of Public Law to Advise Debt Question

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 18—Party to the epoch-making conference on intergovernmental debts, between President-Elect Roosevelt and President Hoover next Tuesday afternoon, will be Prof. Raymond Moley of the department of public law at Columbia University, it was revealed by Mr. Roosevelt last night. Professor Moley was Mr. Roosevelt's chief adviser on economic questions during his presidential campaign—a capacity in which he also served Mr. Alfred E. Smith when he carried the Democratic standard in 1928.

A one-time Ohio school-teacher, Professor Moley is today an expert consultant on economics, government and social problems and has served in this capacity to a score of crime-beset cities and states. In addition to crime surveys, he is the author of books on government, state efficiency and economy, citizenship, immigration and on the theory and practice of politics. As far as is known, this is his first essay in the field of the war debts.

Mr. Roosevelt called Professor Moley to the Executive Mansion last night, and between now and the Washington conference, it is understood, they will go over thoroughly the matters they expect will come up at the meeting. The President-Elect refused to reveal any part of his telephonic conversation with the President beyond confirmation that it had taken place at 12:45 p. m. yesterday and that 4 p. m. Tuesday had been set to go over "the whole situation."

Mr. Roosevelt said he was not certain how long he would stay in Washington before continuing to Warm Springs, Ga., where he plans to pass Thanksgiving Day. The fact that he left the date for leaving Washington open was taken to indicate that he believes the conference may be prolonged beyond Tuesday.

Mr. Roosevelt went to the Capitol today for the first time in the five post-election days he has been in Albany, and continued his work on the state budget with the director of the budget, Mr. Mark Graves, which has been going on in the study of the executive mansion. The Governor has promised to hand over an "absolutely balanced budget" to his successor at Albany, Col. Herbert H. Lehman, on State Inauguration Day, Jan. 1, 1933. This means economies to the extent of $80,000,000, the impending deficit total. It is known that he hopes to effect these in governmental economies rather than through increasing taxpayers' burdens.

The Governor expects to stay on his farm estate at Hyde Park until Monday evening. He will leave New York City at 10 a. m. Tuesday for Washington.

Mrs. Roosevelt does not expect to accompany the President-Elect to Washington, as she is a stickler for regular attendance on her classes in government and literature at the Todhunter School for Girls in New York City. She expects to leave there for Warm Springs later in the week.

Oratory Banned At Convention

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 18—A speechless convention?

One was actually held here this week by the Ohio Valley Improvement Association. No orators were invited.

The more than 50 delegates got right down to brass tacks. All the work was done on a round-table plan. It took only one day to finish the convention business under this plan. Usually it takes two days.

Tolls for boats passing through government locks and dams were opposed by the association, as was the Lornegan bill, which would place all inland waterway traffic under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and would require all boats plying the rivers as common carriers to have a certificate and to file tariffs with the commission. Regulation of river transportation in its present revival was opposed by most of the delegates because they believed it might prove fatal to put such a handicap on this early development of this commerce.

All officers were reëlected, including Capt. Oscar F. Barrett, the president of the association.

INSULL EXTRADITION SIGNED

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18 (AP)—Extradition documents in the case of Mr. Samuel Insull, Chicago utilities operator, now in Greece, were signed by President Hoover yesterday. The presidential warrant will be sent to the American Legation at Athens immediately with other papers in the case.

ALIENS PAY IN GOLD FOR SOVIET FOOD

Repudiation of Ruble in Foreigners' Shop About Trebles Prices

ORDER HITS ENVOYS AND PRESS WRITERS

By W. H. CHAMBERLIN

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

MOSCOW—A casual stroller on Petrovka Street on a recent afternoon might have imagined that a diplomatic levee was in progress at No. 19, which is the address of the so-called "foreigners' shop," reserved for the food purchases of diplomats and foreign journalists.

A long row of automobiles, flying the flags of a score of nations, stood outside the shop, along with two trucks, one flying the German and one the Polish flag. Inside the shop such an orgy of buying was going on that, if it had been observed in any other capital it might well have been hailed as the beginning of the end of the world depression. The extra staff of clerks and cashiers which had been pressed into service could not cope with the orders which the diplomats and their emissaries were showering forth in profusion.

The significance of this extraordinary scene lay in the fact that this was the last day when the shop was accepting rubles in payment for its wares. From a "soft" and "cheap" ruble basis the shop was being transferred to a disconcertingly "hard" and expensive gold basis. Hence the rush of the diplomats to purchase as long as possible and as much as possible under the old conditions.

Ignores World Prices

What makes the transition especially sharp is the fact that the new gold prices, payable only in foreign currency, have been made up with scant regard for world market prices.

Sugar, for instance, is priced at 12 cents a pound. A cake of laundry soap that might cost 5 cents in America is priced at 20 cents. Flour is 10 cents a pound and chicken (always the chief meat product of the store) about 30 cents a pound, which is considerably higher than the prices which German newspapers advertise for Russian chickens on the Berlin market. Cheese, not of very good quality, is $1 a kilogram. Milk is 10 cents a quart.

While a precise estimate is impossible, the newly established scale of prices is about double the world price level. Nothing is cheaper than it would be in foreign capitals; and while some articles, such as meat and butter, are fairly moderately priced, many others are treble or quadruple the foreign prices.

A noteworthy transformation came over the store on the day after the orgy of last-minute buying. Customers were few and far between; and the attitude of the clerks, which had formerly been one of bored indifference and of reluctance to sell in large quantities, changed to an eager effort to break down "sales resistance."

Promises Gloomy Winter

As the reserves which were laid in during the last days are exhausted, the store will almost necessarily regain its former customers, because there is no alternative to it. The system of distribution of foodstuffs in "closed stores"—stores reserved for the special needs of the employees of a given factory or institution—has gone so far that only the authorized shop on the Petrovka is in a position to supply the needs of the diplomats and journalists.

Foreigners, like Russians, could, of course, resort to the public open markets; but prices here are fantastically high, reflecting the general food shortage, and are likely to go still higher, with an accompanying shrinkage of supply as the seasonally difficult winter and spring come on.

So it is not surprising that gloom pervades diplomatic circles and that prospective entertainment will be on an extremely modest scale. The sudden erection of an extremely high gold price level is especially inopportune at a time of general economy and retrenchment, when governments are apt to turn an unsympathetic ear to requests for increased expense allowances.

Railway Fares Trebled

Another symptom of the resolute determination of the Soviet Government not to accept its own money in payment from foreigners whenever this can be avoided is the recent decision of Intourist, the state tourist organization, to sell tickets, even on Russian internal lines, only for foreign currency. This decision raises the same problem that was raised by the new scale of prices in the food shop. Russian railroad fares, translated into foreign currency, are about three times higher than the world level, except when they are modified for special tours. The trip of less than 12 hours from Moscow to the Soviet border costs more than the trip of almost 24 hours from the Soviet border to Berlin.

An ironical result of the establishment of the new price level, which makes Moscow the most expensive capital in Europe, as regards daily living costs, is that it will freeze out the type of young free lance writer

G.O.P. HARD PUT TO ORGANIZE ITS MINORITY FORCE

Democratic Inroad Digs Deep Hole in Old Line Leadership

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18—Republican leadership in the House finds itself faced with a serious problem in attempting to organize an effective opposition in the new Congress which will take office with the Roosevelt Administration March 4.

Decimation of the "Old Guard" leadership which has dominated both branches of Congress for the past two decades has been complete in the House, with the spectacular wiping out of almost all the famous Republican figures in the Senate.

Practically nothing remains of the list of great names that made legislative history under Speaker Nicholas Longworth during the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover Administrations. And the only consolation to be found is that the overwhelming Democratic majority is too large for convenient organization.

Almost alone stands Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, who took over the reins of party leadership after the passing of Mr. Longworth and guided the still large Republican minority during the last session of Congress when the Democrats found themselves in control for the first time since they were thrown out during the second Wilson Administration.

Gone will be Representative John Q. Tilson of Connecticut, floor leader under Longworth; Representative Willis C. Hawley of Oregon, former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and co-author of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act; Representative Gilbert N. Haugen of Iowa, dean of the House and for many years chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and arbiter of farm relief; Representative Will R. Wood of Indiana, chairman of the Appropriations Committee; Representative Fred S. Purnell of Indiana, Longworth lieutenant and member of the Rules Committee, and many others of those whose leadership has held the party together and made it an effective legislative machine.

Nowhere is the decimation more apparent than in the Appropriations Committee, where only two of 21 Republicans survived the Democratic landslide. Those two are Representatives George Holden Tinkham of Massachusetts and John Taber of New York.

On the Republican Committee of Committees—a group of leaders from each delegation in the House with Republican members—only 12 out of 36 will sit in the Seventy-third Congress, while of the 11 who composed the Steering Committee when Republicans controlled the House, six have been dropped by the electorate.

The most serious aspect of the situation from the Republican viewpoint is that the losses include most of the experienced leaders, leaving a group of younger men, equal perhaps in potential ability, but lacking the long records of service which are considered all important to a well-oiled legislative machine.

As compensation remains the fact that their Democratic opponents have more members than can conveniently be placed in the organization of the House. It will mean either placing more Democrats on every existing committee than is considered practical or reëstablishing some of the old and inconsequential committees eliminated about six years ago in an efficiency reorganization of the House.

St. Paul's Rector Delivers Report

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 18—"We exist to serve Americans that are, not aristocrats that were or would be," the Rev. Dr. Samuel S. Drury, rector of St. Paul's School, declared in his annual summary to the school.

"Certain backers," he continued in the report, "have taken smug satisfaction in comparing a school catalogue with the social register. It is a fact that our social leadership in this new land has a basis almost wholly financial. A sorry sign in this Republic is the assumption that the judgments of the rich are true, and their behavior must be righteous altogether."

Dr. Drury reported individual gifts and endowments totaling more than $60,000 and in the appended treasurer's report, figures indicated that St. Paul's management during 1932 had shown a slight operating profit over expenses. The rector gave instances of economies put into effect during the year and urged greater extension of scholarship aid.

Early Telephone Users Still Listed

Special from Monitor Bureau

SAN FRANCISCO — When the American Speaking Telephone Company issued its first San Francisco directory on June 1, 1878, Mr. A. F. Coffin and Dr. J. P. Trumpour were among the 150 names listed.

And when the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company issued the latest compilation of San Francisco telephone users, on Nov. 1, Mr. Coffin and Dr. Trumpour were still there.

It makes them, according to Mr. Lyle M. Brown, division manager of the communications company, with a single exception the world's longest commercial subscribers to telephone service. They are outranked, he says, only by a resident of New Haven, Conn., whose name was in the directory of that city issued three months ahead of San Francisco's directory, and who still continues telephonic service.

The New Haven directory, issued Feb. 21, 1878, is claimed to be the world's first, while the San Francisco card, listing more than three times as many telephones, is held to be the world's second.

The original San Francisco directory listed 52 different businesses, including such representatives of a bygone age as livery stables and "capitalists."

ROYALTY CONTRACT REVISION ASKED

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 18 (AP)—Revision of the contract governing payment of royalties to composers and song writers was demanded by members of the National Association of Radio Broadcasters in a resolution adopted Nov. 16 at the final session of their convention here.

Plans were made to continue the fight with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers over royalty rates. Under the present contract, which recently was adopted, broadcasters pay the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers a lump royalty basis on the net receipts of the station.

YALE EXHIBITS CHINESE ENGRAVINGS

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 18—An exhibition of ancient Chinese stone engravings and low relief sculpture, presented through the medium of paper rubbings, opened today in the Yale Gallery of Fine Arts. The rubbings, according to an ancient process, are made by pressing thin sheets of paper on the relief to be reproduced. The elevated surfaces are then inked, leaving the incised portion in white. The exhibition is one of a series to be held from time to time at Yale to present special phases of Far Eastern art.

Among the objects illustrated by the rubbings are bronzes from the Chou Dynasty (1122-225 B. C.), some of the Wu tomb reliefs and tiles of the Han Dynasty (202 B. C.-221 A. D.), various examples from the Lung-mem caves, and engravings from Sung and Ming Dynasty paintings. The rubbings have been assembled for this exhibition from collections in the Metropolitan Museum, the Fogg Museum of Harvard University, the Cleveland Museum of Art, and the Yale Gallery of Fine Arts.

HARVARD LABORATORY TO TEST VENTILATORS

Establishment of a fan-testing laboratory at the Harvard Engineering School, designed to standardize and perfect modern ventilating equipment, is announced by Dean H. E. Clifford. The project was undertaken, it is stated, because of the increasing importance of mechanical air and temperature control in modern building construction, where in many cases the traditional windows and ventilators have been abandoned in favor of mechanical ventilation.

The laboratory will prove useful to a variety of industrial and community projects by providing an independent agency for fan testing. Tests have been made already for the East Boston Vehicular Tunnel. Dean Clifford believes new investigations will lead to improvements in fans or blowers used in power plants and industrial processes and in the perfection of propellers used for marine and air transport.

Unusual Career of Louisa M. Alcott Shown in Exhibit at Public Library

In the exhibition room of the Boston Public Library there is on view a collection of books and pictures, lent by Little, Brown & Co., having to do with the extraordinary career of Louisa May Alcott, that literary figure first of New England and then of the world at large whose writings have given pleasure to millions of children in the last 65 years, whose books have sold 5,000,000 copies in the United States alone and who was to arouse the pirating and foreign print activities represented in at least another 2,500,000 copies.

Miss Alcott's centenary occurs on Nov. 29. In many schools and libraries the date will be observed, for wherever a widespread straw vote has been taken among children "Little Women" is apt to shine forth as the favorite book among them. Delegates of the American Library Association, too, and at one of the National Education Association, asked to ballot on 100 books considered to be favorites with children, unhesitatingly gave first place to "Little Women."

Miss Alcott was a native of Germantown, Penna., but her family soon moved to New England. The family was usually poor, sometimes in actual want. The father was one of the most brilliant men of his day, a philosopher generations ahead of his time, who knew that, though material food may be restricted, mental and spiritual food need not be.

Louisa became, in a day when such things were still outlandish, the actual support of the family. She wrote the things she knew. She put the Alcott family story into "Little Women" and then things began to come more easily for the family, though there was always a tendency to be slightly abashed that the tale of doings which seemed humble and private should arouse such a vast and vigorous interest in the public.

The exhibition is an unprecedented collection of first and foreign editions, including English and Scottish, and translations into Finnish, French, Czech, German, Dutch, Magyar, Italian, Spanish, Polish, Swedish, Norwegian and Japanese. The most permanent aspect of it is the excellent bibliography, compiled now in the face of a visible need, by Lucille Gulliver, with an appreciation of the author by Cornelia Meigs.

SEA RESEARCH AIDED BY BOSTON SKIPPERS

Samples of ocean ooze taken from the bottoms of the "Seven Seas," scrapings from vessels in drydock in Boston, anchor mud, seaweed and dredgings from known longitudes and latitudes are being forwarded to Dr. V. A. Latham, president of the Illinois State Microscopical Society, for research purposes.

Coast guard commanders operating in New England waters, captains of transatlantic liners running out of Boston, masters of fishing vessels and officials of drydocks have been requested by the Maritime Association of the Boston Chamber of Commerce to collect these specimens and to forward them to the microscopical society in Chicago. Mr. Frank S. Davis, manager of the Maritime Association, today received a letter of appreciation from Dr. Latham for the coöperation he arranged.

GROUP SEEKS TRADE FOR PORT OF BOSTON

More business for the port of Boston is sought by the Foreign Commerce Club of Boston, Inc., which announces plans for action during the coming year, lining up committees to "contact, support and get squarely behind all movements" for the benefit of the port.

Leading activities include the drawing up of a bill to be filed with the Legislature, to give the Boston Port Authority more power, said Mr. Walter E. Doherty, president. Other organizations are to be requested to support the bill.

SORZANO TO FORM CABINET

LA PAZ, Bolivia, Nov. 18 (AP)—President Daniel Salamanca again has authorized the liberal leader, Mr. Tejada Sorzano, to form a parliamentary Cabinet supplanting the President as far as the Constitution will permit. Mr. Sorzano began consultations with political leaders and it was believed his failure of last week would not be repeated.

FRENCH INDORSE MOST OF BRITISH ARMS PROPOSALS

Regret Omission of Plank on Political Security in Simon Platform

By Cable from Monitor Bureau

PARIS, Nov. 18—The British disarmament proposals presented at Geneva yesterday have been sympathetically received in France.

In general the press echoes the approval voiced by M. Rene Massigli of the British appeal to Germany to return to the Disarmament Conference. There is also widespread pleasure at Sir John Simon's declaration that the Versailles Treaty is a binding agreement which may not be unilaterally violated.

At the same time, however, regret is expressed that the British Foreign Secretary did not discuss the French plan more in detail. What is still more generally decried is that the British proposal makes no concrete allusion to the political conditions for security posed by France such as sanctions against the aggressor and mutual military assistance.

Regarding the proposal that all of the European states solemnly reaffirm their renunciation of the use of force to settle their differences, French opinion welcomes anything tending to banish recourse to war. Nevertheless it would be misleading not to record a statement made to the Monitor correspondent by a spokesman at the Quai d'Orsay to the effect that the French Government feels such reaffirmation risks being a mere redundant rewording of the Briand-Kellog pact outlawing war.

The British Government's acceptance "in principle" of the French thesis with regard to control of armaments is noted with marked pleasure here. Comment on other specific projects put forward by Britain is withheld until they have been more closely studied.

The resignation of the von Papen cabinet in Berlin has aroused almost more interest here than the British proposals. The general impression of the press is summed up in a statement appearing in the Petit Parisien: "While it is not possible to talk seriously of a vigorous democratic tendency in Germany, it is proved nevertheless that an authoritative régime as the late cabinet termed itself cannot maintain itself lastingly against opposition of great majority opinion."

In the realm of French domestic affairs M. Edouard Herriot, the Prime Minister, yesterday obtained a vote of confidence, 377 to 212, on a question of the Government's agricultural policy. To win Socialists' support, however, M. Herriot had to agree to set up a national grain office to regulate the price farmers will receive for their wheat.

Canadian Farmer Grows New Fruit

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

HOLDFAST, Sask.—Residents of this town and district are broadcasting far and wide the remarkable achievements of one of their number in growing fruit. Gottlieb Fahlman, farming near this town, has grown this year an astonishing variety of fruit, considering the fact that it has always been thought impossible to grow fruit in this part of Canada.

Three varieties of large apples, including the famous Northern Spy, and seven varieties of crabapples, five sorts of plums, cherries, grapes, strawberries, were grown by Fahlman. His experiments have produced at least one original fruit, resulting from the grafting of plums on a cherry tree.

POLICE TO USE 79 SCOUT CAR RADIOS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17 (AP)—Police departments over the country were reported Nov. 15 by the radio division of the Commerce Department to be operating 79 short-wave radio stations from headquarters to scout cars, an increase of 26 in the past year.

The division's annual report said also that amateur operators had increased from 22,739 to 30,374, and were performing a useful service during emergencies when regular communication systems had been destroyed.

WRIGHT'S SILVER CREAM

Boston Groups Urge Economy In Government

Boston business interests, including the Good Government Association, the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Boston Real Estate Exchange, are demanding action on the part of city officials in reducing expenses and thus taxes.

Mr. Samuel Cabot, chairman of the joint committee on municipal finance of the latter two organizations, in a statement representing their views yesterday, said that taxpayers' incomes have been reduced from 25 to 100 per cent while the pay roll of the city and county government of Boston has been greater than it was in prosperous years, both in dollars and the number of employed.

"Salaries and wages of public employees," Mr. Cabot declared, "are almost 50 per cent of the total requirements of Boston's government. The community has not sufficient income resources to continue this excessive pay roll burden for another year. The paramount obligation of the city government is to bring its costs down to what the public can afford."

The executive committee of the Good Government Association, at a meeting yesterday, agreed that an investigation of city government expenditures, if properly conducted with the assistance of "public spirited and fearless counsel," would be of great advantage at the present time. There is no reason, it was pointed out, why political machinery like every other kind of machinery "should not be inspected at stated periods; and we have not had a real investigation for a generation."

Free Breakfasts For Unemployed

Because a Greek immigrant who landed in New York a dozen years ago knows what it means to be cold and hungry, 200 unemployed in Boston will know the comfort of food and shelter for a few minutes at least every day in December.

Memory of poverty days has stirred Mr. Perry Koskoris, proprietor of a shoe repair shop on Washington Street, to do his bit towards relieving Boston's distressed, even though his own business does not bring him great profits. Accordingly, he has invited 200 unemployed to a free breakfast every December morning.

He has made arrangements to feed the hungry at a near-by restaurant, run by a friend of his. Those applying will be given tickets.

PROGRESS MADE FOR REGULATION OF BUS CARRIERS

Commissioners to Draw Up Plan for Uniform Control Act

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Nov. 18—Further steps toward regulation of motor vehicle carriers were taken here when the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners named Judge George H. English of Missouri chairman of a committee to draw up uniform regulations under the proposed uniform act for regulation of such carriers.

This action followed adoption of the report by the Committee on Motor Vehicle Transportation, which declared that unless these vehicles are regulated in a constructive manner the public will tax them off the highways. Mr. A. R. McDonald of Michigan was appointed to head a committee to follow up the action of the state legislatures on the proposed uniform acts.

Mr. E. I. Lewis, interstate commerce commissioner, commended the action of the West Virginia commission in limiting truck traffic along highways parallel to railroads. Mr. Perry T. Knight of Georgia advocated federal legislation for regulation of motor vehicle carriers, but none which would supplant state control over intrastate traffic.

Mr. Mayland H. Morse of New Hampshire recommended extensive state regulation of relationships between holding companies and utilities.

Mr. Hugh White of Alabama urged a federal fact-finding agency to ascertain facts jointly affecting utilities and holding companies and to make such data available to legislatures, courts, and other bodies. He told of widespread evils in Alabama which he alleged resulted from activities of holding companies.

"There are some of us who have been on record for several years as being of the opinion that holding companies under the law not only may be regulated, but in the public interest should be regulated, at least in the matter of their securities issues."

Strong consumer demand for reductions in public utility rates has resulted from the changed economic conditions, according to Mr. Fred P. Woodruff of Iowa, chairman of the committee on valuation.

Washington and Wisconsin commissions, the report said, entertain the view that in a period like the present the matter of weight to be given to cost of reproduction estimates is immaterial because utility companies cannot reasonably expect to have rates fixed to yield a normal rate of return on any valuation, however fairly established.

Cincinnati was awarded the 1933 convention to begin on the second Tuesday in October.

MunicipalPlanning Termed Safe Road To Fair Taxation

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 18—That city planning brings sounder and fairer municipal financing and taxation was the keynote of the final sessions of the twenty-fourth National Conference on City Planning here Wednesday. Mr. J. Lionberger Davis, chairman of the board of the Security National Bank Savings & Trust Company of St. Louis, asserted there was no conflict between sound economics and wise social engineering, and that "no part of the community can be rich in the broad sense of that word if the rest of the community is poor."

"We prosper only with our community; never at its expense," he declared. "If we are to have sound cities we must sink our individual immediate interests, not only for the good of the whole, but for our own ultimate advantage."

Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd's statement here recently that the nation's tax bill amounts to $15,000,000,000 a year was challenged by Mr. Harold S. Buttenheim, New York editor, who said that, while Admiral Byrd did not reveal the source of his estimate, he was "not aware that any responsible and unprejudiced research organization has ever computed the combined collections of all governmental units in the United States in any one year at more than $12,000,000,000."

Declaring himself opposed to waste and graft where such exist, Mr. Buttenheim held that "to allege, as does Admiral Byrd, that state and local taxes must be cut $2,750,000,000 and to assume that any such reduction could be made without greatly increasing unemployment, deepening the depression and depriving the public of needed governmental services, is utterly to misrepresent the needs of the times." Mr. Buttenheim contended that vastly increased federal expenditures at this time are warranted as a temporary step for prosperity.

Mr. Frederick H. Fay, chairman of the Boston Planning Board, held that long-term planning for the physical growth and development of American cities "has come to be recognized as not only desirable and feasible, but entirely necessary and essential."

Here Lincoln Got His Early Inspirations

LINCOLN STORE AGAIN IS RISING IN ILLINOIS TOWN

Corner Stone Laid for One of Group Dedicated at Old New Salem

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

PETERSBURG, Ill., Nov. 18—The corner stone was laid at old New Salem near here yesterday for a store wherein one need not barter for the things he carries away with him. The store is to be the rebuilt Berry-Lincoln store. And the treasures to be obtained free for the seeking are those of inspiration. For it was here that Abraham Lincoln, in the early years of his manhood, not only kept store, but also learned much of the cultural side as well as the reality of life.

In the village of New Salem, the reconstruction of which was dedicated yesterday, the young Mr. Lincoln read Shakespeare in Onstott's, the cooper's shop. Here Ann Rutledge became a force in his life. Here he worked as surveyor, was appointed postmaster, and finally was elected to the Illinois General Assembly.

Living for six years in the village, beautifully situated amid oak trees on a high bluff overlooking the Sangamon River, he developed more fully his native appreciation of simplicity, and allowed himself to undergo a seasoning process which later, as President of the United States, served him well in discriminating between what was essential to his country's welfare and what was superficial.

At yesterday's exercises, with Mr. Logan Hay of Springfield, president of the Abraham Lincoln Association, as chairman, the principal speaker was Gov. Louis L. Emmerson. A paper by Governor-Elect Henry Horner was read. The entire town, deserted shortly after Lincoln's residence there and now lying within the Old Salem State Park, is being rebuilt by the State. Onstott's, the cooper's shop, the only original building left, will be protected by an outer structure. Except for the Berry-Lincoln store, which will be sheathed with walnut siding, all the others will be made of hewn oak logs set on stone foundations, as of old.

Though henceforth the grinding of grist at the mill and the sawing of logs can be heard only in retrospect, the cabins will be here, possibly to remind some future President of the simplicity of one President's life; and the same oaks and the same river and the same source of the winds are there to instill into his youthful heart, whoever he may be, that peace which, surpassing all understanding, makes great men of the simple at heart. For Salem, an old Biblical word, means peace, one is told.

The 13 buildings now under contract will be completed by late spring. No date has been set for reconstructing the remaining half of the town.

New Plymouth Put on Display

The first impressions were that it might be a Plymouth and then again it might not be—but those who have just visited Chrysler showrooms saw for the first time what the dealers assured them was the new Plymouth Six. Radically changed in nearly all outward appearances, the sloping, slightly-rounded radiator is the first new feature to strike the eye.

Pronounced impressions of a distinctly "new" car are made by the wide and deep fenders, concealed gasoline tank and high hood, giving an impression of solidity. Standard equipment includes free wheeling, hydraulic brakes, adjustable front seats and 17-inch wire wheels. Safety glass and automatic clutch are offered at slight extra cost.

Mounted on a 107-inch wheelbase, the six appears to have ample dimensions. The floating power engine develops 70 horsepower at 3600 revolutions per minute. An automatic thermal control has been built into the manifold to maintain an efficient operating temperature under all weather conditions. The six is offered in four body models, business coupé, rumble-seat coupé, convertible coupé and sedan.

Bankers View Clear Records In Trust Field

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 18—It has become the heritage of the country's trust institutions to restore confidence and lead the way back to economic recovery, said Mr. Chester D. Seftenberg of Oshkosh, Wis., in the keynote address before the annual midwestern conference of the American Bankers Association, Trust Division, here today.

Turning to the problem of the ever-increasing cost of government in America, Mr. Seftenberg added:

"Every student of the present economic problem agrees that our present high taxes are a fundamental impediment to any sound, permanent recovery. Approximately 25 per cent of American income will go for taxes in 1932, as compared with 6 per cent in 1912.

"The best remedy for the present economic problem is lower taxes. This means that our governmental units must spend less, that citizens must demand and expect less of government. We cannot have the fads and fancies, the trimmings and luxuries which we now ask of government, for we cannot afford to pay for them."

"The years of depression which are now gradually passing have tested the stability and safety of the trust business of America and it has stood the test in a remarkable way," said Mr. John H. Puelicher of Milwaukee, former president of the American Bankers Association, another speaker.

"Even in suspended institutions," said Mr. Puelicher, "which were trust companies in fact, there appears to be no possibility of loss to anyone. Speaking of all national bank trust institutions suspended during 1931, the Comptroller of the Currency stated that no instance has been reported where loss has occurred to any estate under administration of a national bank by reason of the bank becoming insolvent. Statements by state bank commissioners attest a like situation with respect to trust companies and state banks operating trust departments."

STATE REPEAL MAKES ISSUE FOR MIDWEST

Prohibition Laws Face Attack in Coming Legislatures

CHICAGO, Nov. 18 (AP) — State prohibition laws in the middle West face attack by repeal and modification advocates as the 1933 legislatures convene.

Michigan and North Dakota repealed the liquor suppression clauses in their constitutions in referenda last week. Action was not taken then, however, on enforcement statutes.

Wisconsin, which is as traditionally wet as some of its neighbor states have been dry, has no state prohibition law.

Interpreting the "landslide" election of Democrats under the national platform for repeal as a mandate for legalized liquor, Democratic leaders in Illinois, Indiana and Michigan have announced that repeal would be urged in the next session of their Democratic legislatures.

Incoming legislators have not made state modification an issue in Iowa, Nebraska and the Dakotas. Of these states, Nebraska and South Dakota have constitutional prohibition.

The Illinois House, still Republican, has voted that a special session be called to consider repeal of the state prohibition law and the Search and Seizure Act.

North Dakota's referendum removed the constitutional mandate for enforcement laws, which remain in force unless the Legislature decides to repeal them.

The prohibition amendment to the Michigan constitution was repealed and Democratic leaders announced their intention to repeal the dry laws.

Indiana Democrats have announced plans for early repeal of the stringent Wright "bone dry" law, one of the strictest in the nation.

Gov. George White of Ohio, who favors modification, said that prior to repeal or amendment of the Federal laws he would veto changes because "chaos and confusion" would follow. Ohio has constitutional prohibition.

Another attempt to repeal the Minnesota prohibition act has been promised by State Representative John J. McDonough, St. Paul Democrat. Wisconsin's dry law was repealed in 1919 after a referendum.

Director of Prohibition Points to Duties Ahead

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18 (AP)—Anent the election, personnel of the Bureau of Prohibition has been asked by its director, Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, to exceed the "loyalty, devotion and skill you have shown in the past."

In the Bureau Bulletin, issued weekly to bureau employees, he said:

"You have fought a good fight during the last 28 months. I am proud of you. You face now a seemingly, but not actually, harder task. The real test of this organization will be its ability to go forward in the same degree of loyalty, devotion and skill you have shown in the past. I ask you even to exceed it. This is all the election must mean to any of us—a stepping stone to a greater opportunity to do our duty."

Japanese Attitude At Geneva Brusque

"extensive drive" will suppress the insurgents within a few days. Foreign military observers, however, believe that no extensive operations are possible until additional Japanese reinforcements arrive.

Soviet sources reaffirm that subjugation of the considerable areas under control of the anti-Manchukuo forces will require at least two additional Japanese divisions. Foreign military observers generally believe, that a minor offensive has opened, hoping that the anti-Manchukuo forces will be intimidated and surrender, but that if resistance is continued, a major offensive can be expected.

It is indicated that the Kwantung command sees a possibility that extensive reinforcements for large-scale operations may be necessary. Lieutenant-General Koiso, chief of staff, left Changchun for Tokyo today to discuss the situation.

A government spokesman said that Mr. T. V. Soong, Finance Minister in Nanking, has advised the anti-Manchukuo forces not to harm the 100 or more Japanese hostages still held in Hailar and Manchuli, since anything happening to them would be certain to bring about world-wide anti-Chinese sentiment. The War Office, however, thinks it unlikely that such advice will be followed if sent, and the sacrifice of hostages is entirely possible.

Meantime, arrangements have been made to repatriate Japanese women and children released by Gen. Su Ping-wen a fortnight ago. These refugees, who have been living in a Soviet railway train opposite Manchuli, will be returned to Japan via Vladivostok.

Chile to Loosen Hold on Peso That It May Reach Own Level

Completion With France of Negotiations for Reopening of Nitrate Market Lays Way for Stable Currency in Americas

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile—The Chilean Government, through central bank declarations, has signified its intention of gradually abolishing its control of foreign exchange operations and allowing the peso rate to find its own level on the basis of controlled export and import business between various countries with whom it has negotiated or is negotiating new commercial treaties.

The announcement, official despite the informality of its circulation, has caused considerable interest throughout South America where export business has been reduced by low commodity prices and imports, necessarily, correspondingly reduced by exchange restrictions.

The keystone of the changed commercial policy is the convention with France known as the Acuerdo de la Camara de Compensaciónes. This convention, which has now been signed after many months of tedious negotiation, reopens the French market to Chilean nitrate of soda—about 200,000 tons annually—but stipulates that 40 per cent of the purchase money shall be set aside in a compensation account, 20 per cent to be applied to the liquidation of French frozen credits in Chile and the remaining 20 to the purchase of essential Chilean purchases in France.

In this way Chile will not only regain its most valuable European market for nitrate but she will remove a source of suspicion and trouble by permitting its merchants to commence paying off back debts to French exporters. Debt payments, private as well as official, have been held up since the exchange control was imposed in August, 1931. In addition, Chile will be enabled once more to commence the importation of vital necessities from France.

The convention, which has done so much to restore optimism not only in Chile but in South America generally, was achieved only after difficult and sometimes bitter negotiations between the two countries. That an understanding was reached redounds to the credit of both sides. Considerable sacrifice was also demanded of the nitrate producers and their bankers to get the scheme going and they finally gave their approval "in the spirit of coöperation we recognize is necessary to restore international trade relations."

Following the announcement of the accord, the Chilean Government disclosed that discussions had also been officially opened with Great Britain, Holland, Belgium, Italy and other European powers. It stated that those with Italy had reached an advanced stage and would yield definite fruit within a few weeks. Consummation of such agreements, it added, was the definite policy of the Government, approved by all political elements figuring in the newly-elected régime.

It indicated that as soon as treaties had been made with the leading powers on the above bases the necessity for the exchange control commission would virtually disappear. Its functions would then be limited to supervising the import and export licenses for the various countries concerned, with a view to maintaining the balance in its proper proportions.

The Government expressed its confidence in the new agreements and its belief that they would restore equity and amity in the foreign relations realm to such an extent that even the import and export licenses would quickly disappear also.

Farmers' Union To Consider 'Farm Holiday'

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 18 (AP)—Although failing to indorse directly the program of the Farmers' Holiday Association, delegates to the annual convention of the National Farmers' Union on Nov. 16 passed a resolution suggesting the farm strike movement as a matter for "careful consideration." The resolution was one of a dozen presented by the resolutions committee, all of which were passed.

Other resolutions included remonetization of silver at 16 to 1; higher income taxes, the revenue to be divided between the national government and the states; exemption of small farms and homes from all taxes except income taxes; passage of the Swank bill licensing dealers in agricultural products and requiring dealers to pay farmers the cost of production as computed by the Department of Agriculture, and reduction of governments, rather than discovery of new sources of revenue, to balance the budget.

A moratorium on debts, public and private, at a low rate of interest was indorsed, as was the Frazier bill calling for government refinancing of farm mortgages.

FOOTBALL NOW NEARING END

Objective Games Feature East, Harvard-Yale Topping List

Eastern football is rapidly nearing the end of the 1932 season and this week-end will close the activity for several of the major teams. Traditional affairs are the feature games, since only one of the undefeated eastern teams plays this week and victory is expected. Pittsburgh facing Carnegie Tech.

The objective of objective games will bring the floundering Yale and faltering Harvard teams together in a contest that resembles nothing in the way of a championship; but which does surpass all other games in tradition regardless of early season success or failure.

Each team had hopes of a great season last spring; but Yale never did start to show anything until late midseason and Harvard, after a fair start, tumbled from esteem at midseason. Unfortunately each team has had more than its share of misfortune taking stars out of the game; but it is predicted that both will be well supplied with man power tomorrow.

This Victory Enough

Satisfying football experts is one aim of football teams; but, despite previous records for the current season, Harvard and Yale alumni and student bodies will take ample satisfaction in a victory from this game. The general trend among those making a study of this contest favors Yale; but all admit most any result may occur. The rivalry started back in 1875 and since then Yale has won 28 times to 16 for Harvard and 6 ties.

Pittsburgh is not expected to have much difficulty with Carnegie Tech unless the Panther players take the game too lightly and have their undefeated record upset. Pittsburgh and Carnegie have met 18 times on the gridiron, the Panthers emerging victors in 14 of the games. Carnegie has won only four. Oddly enough, there have been no ties.

Two intersectional conflicts command attention, with the far West invading New York when Oregon State challenges Fordham and the East invading the Midwest with the United States Naval Academy facing Notre Dame at Cleveland. Oregon State is not able to boast much of a record and, although only paper records are available on the team, its chances against the Fordham Rams are not rated as very good. The Navy team is not believed quite ready to expect victory against Notre Dame either.

Lions Should Triumph

Columbia was dropped from among the undefeated last week-end by Brown; but the Lions aim to make that their only defeat and to close the season tomorrow against Syracuse with a victory. Unless the Lion players have taken that defeat too seriously they should defeat the Orange. Syracuse has not had much success to date. The United States Miliary Academy has its last trial game before facing Notre Dame next week by taking on West Virginia Wesleyan tomorrow.

Boston University has attracted attention this season by its showing under the tutelage of Myles J. Lane and will close its season hopeful only of victory against Boston College. Holy Cross, defeated on sucoessive Saturdays by Brown and Harvard, will attempt a comeback against Manhattan, Chick Meehan's team.

The other games of minor importance in New England will find Tufts matching ability with Massachusetts State and its high-scoring back, Lou Bush; New Hampshire and Connecticut State trying conclusions and Springfield entertaining Rutgers.

Three Advance To Semifinals

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, Nov. 18—Three of the leading seeded players reached the semifinal round of the United States fall scratch squash tennis tournament at the New York Athletic Club, while the other was delayed by the playing of the remaining third-round match, and will meet the winner today.

Harry F. Wolf, United States champion, of the home club, and Philip T. Moore, Columbia University Club, in the upper half, won easily, the former eliminating F. Barry Ryan Jr., Yale Club, 15—6, 15—1; while Moore disposed of Barnwell Elliott, New York Athletic Club, 15—10, 15—12. But Milton Baron of the Fraternity Squash Tennis Club, had the hardest sort of a battle before he conquered his clubmate, R. Mason Kirkland of Elizabeth, losing the first game and trailing in the earlier half of the second. But a supreme effort enabled him to take the second game, and another when trailing by a small margin in the third, gave him the victory by a score of 12—15, 15—10, 15—11.

The third round match resulted in a victory for Patrick J. Cohalan of the home club, over Arnold Wood Jr., Princeton Club, 15—5, 15—1, after it was decided to replay the match instead of counting the victory of Cohalan in the team match on the preceding day. The winner will meet Edward G. McLaughlin, Columbia University Club, for the vacant semifinal bracket. The summary:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 18—Springfield's Indians opened the Canadian-American Hockey League season here last night by trouncing the Providence Reds, the defending champions, 3 to 1. Some splendid goaling by Alfie Moore was a factor in neutralizing the Providence attack. Moore was bombarded heavily throughout, but only let in one goal by Gus Rivers, who opened the scoring by converting a pass from Harry Connor. Springfield tallied the equalizer when Dutch Gainor beat George Seed cleanly in the second period and went ahead less than three minutes later on Arnott's unassisted scoring drive. The summary:

OLYMPICS GET FIRST VICTORY

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

DETROIT, Nov. 18—Detroit Olympics gained a 3-to-0 victory over the Buffalo Bisons, 1931-32 International Hockey League champions, in a listless contest here last night. Less than 2500 fans saw the Bisons outplayed throughout the 60 minutes. O'Neill scored for Olympics late in the first period and Brydson made it 3 to 0 midway through the second. It was the first victory of the season for Olympics, who had been beaten by Windsor and London.

WOULD SCHEDULE DARTMOUTH

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 18 (AP)—Terming Dartmouth as a "natural" opponent, the Daily Princetonian, campus newspaper, yesterday urged the resumption of gridiron relations between the Tigers and the New Englanders. "There is a growing group of Princeton men," the editorial declared, "who earnestly desire that Dartmouth be once more included among the grid rivals of the university. In type in football procedure, and in sentiment, Dartmouth is a natural opponent." Princeton has not faced Dartmouth in football since 1916 when a 13-game rivalry was terminated. The Tiger schedule for the next two years does not list the Manoverians.

NOBLE SIGNS CONTRACT

MONTREAL, Nov. 18 (AP)—Reg Noble, veteran defense player, ended his long holdout campaign and signed a Detroit Red Wing contract yesterday. Noble signed on the dotted line after conferring with Frank Calder, president of the National Hockey League. The Red Wings had referred Noble's case to Calder in accord with the provisions of a new rule whereby the president was empowered to suspend any holdout when the terms offered were, in his opinion, fair.

LONDON, Nov. 18—With all the first nine teams victorious last weekend there is no significant change to record today in the standing of the English Rugby Football League. Which means to say the situation continues extremely tense—to the delight of the public interested in the professional phase of the handling code. For these people the Rugby league has all the importance of a national championship, and indeed it is one to the extent that there is no professional rugger in Britain outside of northern England.

This season the Lancashire clubs are crowding the others out of the picture. Seven have pushed their way into the first nine places—York and Leeds constitute Yorkshire's entire representation there—and the form of their star players has led the impartial critics to consider Lancashire the favorite for the forthcoming inter-county tournament. The most recent performance of the league leader deserves special comment. Year after year since the war Salford failed to win at Huddersfield and Saturday at long last it succeeded. The score was 6 points to 0. This was one of the closest wins on the day of rather one-sided games. York, for example, scored 18 points to Keighley's 2, St. Helens beat Wigan Highfield, 34 to 7 and Leeds vanquished Bramley, 30 to 13.

In amateur Rugby much interest is focused on the matches for the English inter-county championships, won last season by Gloucestershire. The title is now certain to change hands for the holder was beaten Saturday by Somersetshire, 12 to 3, and so failed to head the standing of the western division. The honor of doing this will fall upon either Somersetshire or Devonshire. The latter beat Cornwall, 5 to 3. The competition is decided in four sections, the winner of each being considered as semifinalist and in the north the situation is very open as can be seen from the standing as follows:

	W	D	L	Points For	Agst
Lancashire	2	0	0	26	6
Northumberland	1	2	0	20	11
Yorkshire	1	1	0	30	24
Cheshire	1	1	1	28	34
Durham	1	0	1	33	22
Cumberland	0	0	4	31	73

Saturday's results here were: Lancashire 14, Cumberland 6; Northumberland 8, Yorkshire 8. Yorkshire just pulled their game out of the fire by kicking a penalty goal in the closing stages.

In club Rugby, which is a form of the game that evokes the most enthusiasm in the Midlands, South and Wales, the outstanding event was Cambridge University's victory over Leicestershire 8 points to 3. Up to Saturday the losers had played 12 games and had not once been beaten. The Light Blues are coming along nicely in preparation to the intervarsity clash at Twickenham, Dec. 6, and a like remark applies to Oxford, which on Saturday lost to the world-famous Blackheath Club by 3 to 0. The Cantabs' chief strength seems to be forwards, while the rivals are exceptionally well furnished with talent among the backs.

LEN SHIRES TO NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 18 (AP)—Len Shires, younger brother of Arthur Shires of the Boston Braves, has been acquired by the Nashville club of the Southern Association from Durham in the Piedmont League. He will report for spring training in March. He will be given a trial either at shortstop or second base.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18—New York Americans sprang a surprise at the opening of the New York hockey season last night at Madison Square Garden by defeating Boston, 4 to 2. Both teams showed great improvement over last season, but the locals with few exceptions outplayed their rivals all the way. McVeigh was especially effective against Stewart, while Worters once more proved he has few equals on goal defense.

Boston's shock troops were aggressors at the start, but good defense by Worters held Shore and Stewart from scores. When the second and third strings went on, however, the tide turned, and combined attacking gave Americans a goal, Pilmore scoring on Keating's rebound. Later, on the return of the first string Americans, Himes broke past Galbraith and scored on McVeigh's pass.

Penalties against Americans were frequent in the second period, their ranks being twice reduced to four, but no scores came then. Finally, the Boston third string scored when Frank Jerwa, from the side boards, sent a long pass to Oliver, who drove the scoring shot from close in. After a scramble about the American net, in which Worters barely saved a goal, the American second string launched a series of individual dashes from which goals came off the sticks of Patterson and Sheppard. Boston started its power drive once more and Stewart scored on Barry's rebound for Boston's second goal. The summary:

MONTREAL, Nov. 18—A goal by Larochelle, on a pass from Lepine, with less than two minutes of the overtime session remaining to be played, gave the Canadiens their first victory of the National Hockey League season as the Detroit Red Wings were held scoreless throughout the 70 minutes. It was the first defeat for Detroit.

The visitors showed more speed than has been their custom in the past, but they tired toward the end of the third period. Canadiens spoiled a number of good chances by poor shooting, but they staged a strong attack in the extra 10 minutes. The game provided a great exhibition of goal tending by Hainsworth and Roach. CHICAGO, Nov. 18—Fast from start to finish was the National Hockey League game in which the Chicago Black Hawks defeated the Toronto Maple Leafs, 3 to 1, before a 3000 crowd at the Coliseum here last night. The Hawks appeared keyed up and looked improved 50 per cent over the form of the first two games, which they lost and tied. The world champion Maple Leafs kept the battle in front of the Hawks' goal in the first period, but Gardiner, local goalie, held them at bay. In the second period, the Hawks seized the aggressive and Thompson scored with the aid of Gottselig and Couture. Later Romnes scored with two assists.

In the third period, after a penalty near the Hawks' net that sent a player from each team to the box, the puck was flipped from behind the goal and Gracie batted it home for Toronto.

From then on the visitors sent four and five men into the attack, taking chances. On a quick break down the ice before the defense could recover, McFadyen scored Chicago's third goal. The summary:

Reforms Confront Roumania

Ministerial Changes Indicate Conciliation; Strength of Republicanism Minimized

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON
Special European Correspondence

The formation of a new Ministry in Roumania, presided over by the chief of the National Peasants, Dr. Juliu Maniu, who is aided by Mr. Nicolas Titulescu as Foreign Minister, offers the prospect of much needed reforms. There are a number of problems which are particularly acute; and, though it would be an exaggeration to count the dynastic problem among them, it is this problem which has attracted most attention in the popular press.

The viciasitudes of King Carol, who was for some time excluded from the throne as a result of domestic complications, and who, in exile, saw his little son, Prince Michael, actually regarded as the ruler, though dominated, of course, by a Council of Regency, have undoubtedly provoked further political intrigues, and the most has been made of family differences by courtiers and politicians with grievances.

The whole position is unfortunate, yet it may be taken that the throne of the King is stable enough, provided he governs constitutionally and provided the financial situation is not materially worsened. The undercurrent of republicanism, that has been noted from time to time, does not appear, in present circumstances, to be dangerous.

The King, in appointing the new Ministers, definitely referred to his desire to observe the constitutional rules. This is a happy change from certain too markedly personal nominations which have not had good results. The Prime Minister enjoys an excellent reputation of independence and disinterestedness. Moreover he is beyond question the real leader of his party, which is the dominating force in Parliament.

As for Mr. Titulescu, who has been Minister of Roumania in London, and permanent delegate to the League of Nations, he is one of the best-known diplomatists in Europe. There is no one in his country who can compare with him for knowledge of foreign affairs, and who possesses anything like the same influence in the councils of Europe.

There are two questions which are of great importance. One is that of Roumanian finances, and the other that of a pact with the Soviets. The finances have been studied in the reports of M. Rist, the French authority, and in the report of Mr. Auboin, who is the technical counselor of the Roumanian bank. They point to difficulties which are common to all European countries. Dr. Maniu has declared that he will devote his attention to the consolidation of the currency and Mr. Madgearu, the Finance Minister, who protested against the conclusions of Geneva two months ago, asserts that he will take strong measures against alarmists who spread rumors of inflation and revaluation of the currency.

It is understood that the collaboration of the League of Nations in the financial reform of the country will be carefully considered. The whole mechanism, administrative and financial, of the state is involved. There must be a thorough overhauling if receipts and expenditure are to be balanced. Drastic economies must be practiced. It is held to be desirable to reduce the number of functionaries, who have multiplied, as elsewhere, beyond any genuine public need.

The Government appealed to the League to lighten its obligations toward foreign creditors; but it revolted against the measures of control that were proposed. Nevertheless, if Roumania is to be aided, it is clear that it must submit to surveillance, and in its own interest some kind of tutelage has probably become necessary.

Mr. Titulescu did not see eye to eye with Mr. Valda-Voevod, the former Prime Minister, on the subject of a pact of non-aggression with Russia. He resigned because his advice went unheeded, and although every effort was made to retain him as Minister, it was his action which brought down the previous cabinet. Now he is himself in charge of foreign affairs, but the problem remains and must be faced.

The French Government favors a pact with Russia; but the bone of contention is Russia's non-recognition of Bessarabia, which was awarded to Roumania in the peacemaking. Will Russia renounce its claims to this territory? If so a solution can easily be found. But while the fate of Bessarabia remains in doubt, the relations of Roumania and Russia will necessarily be far from satisfactory.

Labor Head Urges Dry Law Respect

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18 (AP)—Mr. Matthew Woll, chairman of labor's national committee for modification of the Volstead Act, said in a statement yesterday that labor sees "no excuse for violation of the law" until Congress has amended it.

Interpreting last week's election as clearly against the Volstead Act and the Eighteenth Amendment, Mr. Woll said that to "rush forward" under the assumption that the law already had been changed was "not the way of Americanism and it is not the road to true temperance."

"We neither counsel nor countenance any stampede on the part of private citizens, public officials or others to act in advance of a change of the law in defiance and violation of the law as it stands," he said.

Dry Enforcement to Cease

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 18 (AP)—New Jersey state police were advised by Mr. William A. Stevens, Attorney-General, yesterday to cease enforcement of the Hobart State Prohibition Act on Dec. 6. The act was repealed by vote of the electorate on Nov. 8. The police also were advised that they were without authority to enforce the federal prohibition laws.

EDUCATOR VIEWS RESEARCH LINKS WITH SPIRITUAL

Babson Institute Speaker Finds Deep Significance in Modern Trend

"One of the great business organizations of the country has called upon me as a natural scientist to explain the spiritual vision which is animating scientific research today, and I consider that one of the most significant events in my career." Dr. Ford A. Carpenter, meteorologist and professor at the University of California, thus referred to an address he had delivered yesterday before the Babson Institute in Wellesley.

Dr. Carpenter spoke of the growing concern with things spiritual which the natural scientists have been evidencing. He said that the researcher works from the physical toward the spiritual, and that he recognizes the latter to be of supreme importance. He is humble in the presence of those things which he does not understand, and is always ready to discard the old and accept the new, however opposed it may be to his preconceived notions. "The scientist is always fundamentally honest in his investigations," he said. "His object is truth, and that is the highest spiritual quality."

He quoted two outstanding physicists, in order to illustrate the increasing sincerity and high purpose of those who are working to break down the limitations of knowledge. Dr. Robert A. Millikan has said that "modern science of the real sort is learning to walk humbly with its God." And Sir Arthur Eddington has written, "The philosophic trend of the modern scientific thought differs markedly from the views of 30 years ago. We may certainly expect great changes, and by that time many things will appear in a new aspect."

Dr. Carpenter said that the researcher is first of all a pioneer. And he recounted several anecdotes about Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who was one of his pupils, illustrating the laborious, painstaking preparation for the transatlantic flight, and the unwavering faith in the success of his pioneering venture. The researcher is also a poet, as may be seen in the ways, amazing to natural scientists, through which Helen Keller has found for herself the poetry and beauty around her. The researcher is finally a seer. And here Dr. Carpenter praised those men of natural science who see beyond the physical elements in their laboratories into their dawning spiritual significance.

Hoover Arranges Caucus on Debts

and President Hoover. But the future of the war debts is entirely in Democratic hands and it is entirely possible that no tangible action will be taken during the present discussion beyond a general understanding between the incoming and outgoing Executives, and congressional leaders, that final action is going to be necessary. Since the precise form of that ultimate action depends so exclusively on Democratic policy it is hardly feasible to go farther in the short session of Congress or otherwise before March 4.

Europe Needs Assurance

But in order to avoid the worst international repercussions over the Dec. 15 issue, it becomes necessary to assure European powers that their claims will receive full consideration as soon as that is politically practicable and therefore the three forces —Congress and the two leaders— are expected to draft a very general program for the future, leaving much undetermined, and postponing direct action.

In certain quarters here, nowhere more acutely than in the Department of State, the dangers of an unyielding American attitude on Dec. 15 are clearly recognized. But the domestic political possibilities are also recognized, and as yet no leader has emerged to stem the tide of opposition to debt relaxation which mounts daily with intransigeant statements from various legislative leaders, still, however, most from spokesmen of ultra-nationalism.

The various compromises, including the possibility of earmarked deposits to American account in the debtor countries, and also the suggestion of informally deferring payments as was done while the Hoover moratorium was before Congress, have not yet been put in the form of proposals, although they are under profound examination.

See Hope in Future

In the absence of any tangible encouragement for Dec. 15, State Department and other informed officials are holding grimly on, hoping for the best and taking consolation in the fact that after political clouds blow away the future does hold constructive possibilities. They recognize that refusal to accede to the British, French and Belgian requests for deferment will not help the international situation, either for disarmament, trade recovery, or even treatment of the Far Eastern question.

They appreciate the bitterness which may ensue in Europe, even if the major debtors are able politically and financially to make their payments. And if the debtors decide to default, the consequences are regarded here in all genuinely informed circles as little short of disastrous. Default, it is pointed out, approximates repudiation.

The first danger is not to government debts, for their payment is regarded of questionable value even to creditors, but to the entire structure of private debts, heaped in a great pyramid with the United States at the receiving end.

If public debts are defaulted or repudiated, it is expected private debts will go the same way. The entire fabric of international indebtedness, it is estimated, will then be sorely shaken with grave continuing consequences.

University Found Needing Freedom

versity's task to see that they are not echoes of its opinions," he continued. "We would not have them despise Main Street but honor it by enriching it with wiser judgments and more sensitive consciences.

"An education which renders a student stronger in his power to criticize than in his capacity to enjoy is ruinous. A keenly analytical mind dooms its possessor to unhappiness unless it be vigorously able to delight in the excellencies which it discovers. Appreciation is not the foe of progress; it is part of the trail of sure advance. The sophisticate and the cynic are not fully educated."

Leaders of the Future

Since the world is changing continually, the problem of the university is to turn out leaders "who have the insight, imagination and judgment to deal with problems that their teachers cannot anticipate," Mr. Lippman held.

"To my mind it is here that we shall find the enduring obligation of the universities to the social order. Their task, I venture to suggest, is to scatter among the mass of the people leaders who have the insight to find the common ground beneath willful opinions, the imagination to interpret the present in the perspective of history and judgment to decide which of the paths offered are highways along which it is possible to travel."

Significant Note Struck

Perhaps the most significant note at the conference was that of confident hope "in the expectation that universities can go far toward making the necessary changes of coming decades conduce to the betterment of human life throughout the nation and throughout the world," Dr. Brown declared.

Delegates had found, he said, that universities have obligations not only to their students, but "to the whole community"; that the needs to which university obligation extend should be the object of serious and incessant study; that they should train leaders of thought, and conduct research in various fields of knowledge; that questions relating to economic stability were of peculiar urgency at present; that work in the sociological sciences should be stressed "with a view to redressing the balance which has been disturbed by an extreme absorption in the physical sciences"; that teachers in the sociological group should have experience in the world of affairs.

Other conclusions were that the physical and social sciences should find their full significance "only in an apprehension of values, esthetic and spiritual"; that teaching in the domain of values is of chief importance and has a part in instruction in all the natural sciences, hence the need of "great teachers"; that students should be educated for life in a continually changing world and that academic freedom is indispensable to university teaching.

DR. WOOLLEY TALKS TO HOOVER ON ARMS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18 (AP)—Dr. Mary E. Woolley, president of Mt. Holyoke College, and American delegate to the Geneva Arms Conference, yesterday called upon President Hoover to discuss "affairs at Geneva."

Dr. Woolley said she had feared President Hoover's defeat might harm the prospects of his proposal for a one-third cut in world armaments, but she now felt the proposal would not lose strength because of a change in administrations.

LOUIS XVI ROOM AT PENNSYLVANIA MUSEUM OF ART

Louis XVI Room Opened to Public In Philadelphia

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18 — The opening of the Louis XVI room at the Pennsylvania Museum of Art here Nov. 12 marks the first step toward the installation at the museum of a permanent section of European art since the Renaissance, according to an announcement by Mr. Fiske Kimball, director of the museum.

The room comes from the house known as the Hotel Letellier, on rue Royale, near the Place de la Concord, in Paris, and was the gift of Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice, of New York.

Complete, even to flooring of antique parquet, old hardware and firebacks, with antique balcony rails outside the windows, the room is said to be one of the finest examples of art of that period that survives today. It has been mounted with great care, so that the delicate gradations of the original paint, gray, ivory and cream, survive. The carving is beautifully chaste in design, with broad surfaces and extreme crispness and brilliance in the execution of the slender figures, according to Mr. Kimball.

As the mantel of the room had been replaced in the early nineteenth century, another of the correct period had to be found, Mr. Kimball explained. The one which is here seen, fortunately, not only exemplifies the greatest beauty of that time, but fits the mantel space within a centimeter. It is ornamented with delicate ormolu mounts.

Russia Puts Foreign Shop on Gold Basis

who often comes to Russia with definitely pro-Soviet sympathies.

Protests of foreign diplomats and newspaper correspondents against high prices for foodstuffs charged them were criticized by Izvestia in a recent entire front page article. The Soviet régime will allow no "privileged position" to these foreigners, is the opinion expressed by Izvestia.

No Return to Capitulations

Under the headline "Strange Pretensions of Some Foreigners," Izvestia writes that foreigners desire to be supplied arbitrarily at low prices and ends with the following uncompromising declaration: "Some foreigners would desire that Torgsin, the organization selling goods and foodstuffs exclusively for foreign currency, should place them in a privileged position. But they have gone too far. They must remember that the Soviet Revolution forever buried the régime of capitulations. There can be no return to it."

The foreigners' side of the case, as the Monitor representative gathered from talks with some diplomats, is as follows: There is no objection to paying for foodstuffs with foreign currency if the financial exigencies of the Soviet Government make such a step desirable. But it is difficult to understand on what economic basis Torgsin charges two or three times the prices at which Soviet products are sold in export markets abroad.

Second-grade butter for instance, which is sold in London at 1s. a pound or less, is here priced at 40 cents a pound, and chicken is sold here at about 30 cents a pound when German newspapers advertise Russian chickens at 17 cents a pound. Rice, herrings, bread, flour, milk and almost all articles sold at this store are double or more the world market level.

Meanwhile Torgsin is almost deserted, as foreigners either live on their reserves accumulated during the last days when business was conducted on the ruble basis or patronize the private market.

Price Control Criticized By Chilean Trade Units As Economically Unsound

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile — Food price control is not working well in Chile and the commissariat of supplies is being criticized. Representatives of commerce and industry have made a protest to the Government, pointing out the prejudicial effects apprehended from official intervention and asking for the reconsideration of the law forming commissariat control. Criticism was summarized as follows in the memorial:

1. Apprehension that forcible expropriation, without previous payments of compensation, will depreciate the value of agricultural property and discourage its owners from introducing improvements of which they may not reap the advantage.
2. Fixation of prices, which demands long and careful study of costs and production and distribution, will profoundly disturb normal operations of trade and will restrict production, since farmers will not cultivate products at a loss and factories will cease to produce articles that cannot be sold with a fair margin of profit.
3. The fall in prices will reduce the resources of manufacturers, which will mean the cessation of factory activity, make a rise in wages impossible and increase unemployment. (The Government recently made a wage increase compulsory.)
4. These factors will make it impossible for the public to pay taxes, fiscal, municipal and social, and will inevitably bring about difficulties in public and private economy.
5. Exports will be still further reduced in volume and the importation of essential merchandise become impossible through the lack of instruments of foreign exchange.

The memorial was signed by the presidents of the national agricultural society, the manufacturers' association, the mining institute, the International Chamber of Commerce and the Chilean Chamber of Commerce.

Seaway Debated In New England Council

land industries, and third, lower freight rates to many markets for New England finished products."

The total annual traffic available for water route between New England and the Great Lakes, he said, will be not less than 6,000,000 tons and the saving to New England industries will be not under $16,000,000 yearly.

"From the economic point of view, countered Mr. Merrill, "the cost of the project is so vast, the expense of interest charges, overhead and upkeep so enormous, without any visible income approximately commensurate with the outgo, that the drain on the taxpayers of this country, already overburdened, would constitute an impossible and economically inconceivable condition."

In last night's session Gov. Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts served notice on the other states that the Commonwealth does not like its present competitive position. He proposed that Labor and Capital join in effecting a postponement of restrictive labor laws, a proposal concurred in by Mr. Henry P. Kendall of the industrial committee of the New England Council.

Mr. Kendall today stressed that he would, however, oppose any relinquishment of the high level of social legislation that the State has attained. His support of any change in the labor statutes extends only as far as the 48-hour week in the textile industry, he said. He would support merely temporary alteration of the labor laws to permit longer hours for getting out seasonal textile orders, thus placing Massachusetts on a fair competitive basis with the other states. He believes the long-time trend must be for shorter and shorter working hours.

Subsidized Traffic

Termination for all time of subsidized transportation, easing of certain regulatory restrictions on the railroads and extension of regulation to embrace agencies of transportation that compete with the railroad, are the remedies proposed by Mr. Pelley to safeguard the $26,000,000,000 railroad industry.

Mr. Pelley said the taxpayers provide free waterways for water transportation, free airways for air transportation and make only nominal charges for use of the highway by commercial transportation.

Modes of transportation subsidized by state and federal governments in competition with the railroads are uneconomic, he declared. Asserting that the public has made an investment of $1,500,000,000 in waterways, an investment upon which the Government receives no revenue, he said it would be cheaper for the Government to pay the entire cost of carrying the freight to the seaboard rather than bringing the seaboard to the freight.

He cited comparative figures of the New York State Barge Canal and the Lackawanna Railroad serving practically the same territory as the canal, which show, according to him, that the people of New York could have contracted with the railroad to carry all the freight used by the canal and saved $1.38 a ton or about $4,000,000. This saving would have been effected, he said, even if the people had paid the railroad its average revenue per ton and provided the shippers with free transportation. The proposed St. Lawrence waterway will prove, he said, equally uneconomic.

Free lighted airways, radio beacons and government mail contracts are all forms of subsidies for air transportation that complicate further the railroad's effort to recover, he continued. The highway transporter has found his route financed for him for the most part, by bonds and taxes, while the railroad has had to pay $14,000,000,000 for its roadway and a maintenance charge of $1,000,000,000 annually. It is impossible for any business required to be self-sustaining to meet successfully subsidized competition, he declared.

In addition, he proposed the repeal of the provisions of the Panama Canal Act and the Denison Act which prevent the railroad alone from engaging in water transportation on an equal basis with other transporters; repeal of the recapture clouse in the 1920 Trnasportation Act, the repeal to be retroactive to its effective date, repeal of the valuation section of the Interstate Commerce Act and the making of certain amendments to permit the railroads to maintain a more flexible rate structure.

The present overregulation is accentuated by the freedom from regulation enjoyed by the other transporters. He closed his address with a plea for fair uniformity in the regulation of all agencies of transportation and passage of the legislative bills designed to promote the recovery of the railroads.

Use of income from gasoline taxes for purposes other than highways met vigorous opposition before the agricultural section of the conference. A resolution adopted by the section was based on the ground that farmers pay a large share of government costs through property taxes. The stand was taken that gasoline tax revenues should be used for the benefit of those contributing the fund.

W.C.T.U. to Mass Anti-Beer Forces Until Battle Is Won

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 18—A militant program for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union shaped to fit the current temperance situation was outlined by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the national organization, in a statement here.

In line with her message, the organization states that it has given orders to its army of speakers, radio broadcasters and field workers to concentrate their efforts in the war against liquor; to attack beer first, and to continue the campaign until the beer element has retired.

The program for the W. C. T. U. activity as outlined by Mrs. Boole included the following recommendations:

An educational campaign to promote voluntary total abstinence from alcoholic liquors as a beverage.

The enlistment of the younger generation in the warfare against alcohol in the interest of health, efficiency, public safety and good citizenship.

Emphasis on the necessity for state coöperation in law enforcement.

An appeal for increased efficiency in federal enforcement with adequate punishment in fines and imprisonment for deliberate violation of the law.

A study of the benefits of prohibition as revealed by local, state, and federal departments dealing with child welfare, poverty and crime.

A study of the plans of the distillers, wine producers and brewers of other countries to promote sales here in the event of repeal or modification.

A publicity campaign which will tell the truth about the effects of alcohol, the real character of the liquor traffic before prohibition, answer half truths and misrepresentations in the press and promote observance and enforcement of the prohibition law and every other law.

"The nations of the world are watching us," said Mrs. Boole in conclusion; "will the United States go back? The W. C. T. U. answers 'No!' and every member says 'The line shall not break where I stand.'"

A GOOD plan to be photographed on your birthdays—if the photographs are by "Boston's foremost."

Furniture for Dolls' Houses

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

THE toys best loved by little children are the tiny ones they can handle without effort. The brightly gay ones. The sturdy ones that withstand tumbles and bumps and jams. The miniature furniture illustrated has all these qualities. It will add charm and fun to any playhouse.

The mother or sister has at hand a delightful pastime in weaving and upholstering the lovely little pieces. They stand six inches high and are unbreakable. The graceful and well-proportioned lines are shown in the picture. The individual may choose her own color combinations, from the materials offered, which are in yellow, brown, emerald, black, orange, red, blue. The weaving is done with art fiber and the pieces are upholstered in flowered glazed chintz. There is no waste of materials because just enough are furnished to complete the pieces.

The art fiber used in weaving is a flexible cordlike material that cannot crack or split, and is worked dry. The stakes are the same kind of fibrous material but reënforced through the center with a strong fine wire, for rigid support of parts like legs, side arms, back and cross rails. The foundations of the seats are thin wooden boards properly bored to receive the up and down stakes.

The following directions are for a red and green color combination:

Step 1. Measure a 23½-inch green stake, 5 inches from each end and bend back as illustrated. This forms the front legs, side arms and back all in one piece. (Fig. 1.)

Step 2. Measure 2½ inches from each end and nail the front legs to one end of seat frame. (Fig. 2.)

Step 3. Take the 7-inch back leg pieces. Strip 1 inch of the covering from the wire the same as an electrician would strip an electric wire. (Fig. 3.)

Step 4. Measure 2½ inches from the opposite end, and nail to the seat frame. Bend the stripped wire around the back bow, twisting it very tight. (Fig. 4.)

Step 5. Take the two 6¾ inches cross rail pieces. Measure ⅛ inch from each end of both pieces and strip the covering from the wire. Bend one end around the back right leg 1½ inches from the floor, and the other end around the left front leg. Take the other piece and cross from right front leg to the left back leg. These pieces brace the legs and give enduring strength to the frame. (Fig. 4.)

Step 6. The work is now ready for the interesting weaving. Insert the small stakes provided, into holes bored in the seat frame. Insert the six 7-inch long pieces in front and the 11¼-inch long pieces back of the short ones. The side and back stakes should protrude through the seat 4¾ inches at the bottom and 6¼ inches up from seat. The front stakes protrude 3½ inches through bottom and up 3½ inches. When inserting these stakes make sure that they come inside of the arms and back bow, not outside. (Fig. 5.)

Step 7. With red fiber cord weaver put in a row of fitching weave both above and below the seat board. The fitch weave is simply twisting around each stake with a weaver (Fig. 6.) To avoid waste of material measure around the chair, allow two inches, then cut off a piece of weaver twice as long, double it around a leg, and proceed to weave. Tuck ends into weaving.

Step 8. With a red weaver, put in a fitching weave directly below cross rails. Below this row put in a row, same weave, using a green weaver. With the fingers, press the two rows tightly together. The neatest work will be achieved if all weaving is started in the back.

Step 9. Tie off the stakes at the bottom of the chair. This is done by selecting a stake, bending it in front of the next and in back of the next. (Fig. 7.) Now tie off the stakes in front of the seat, employing the same method.

Step 10. Measure two inches above the seat and put in a row of fitching weave of red (Fig. 6). Then take a green weaver and weave over and under 10 times around, and on the eleventh time, insert a small piece of stake alongside of the front leg (see stake shown by dotted lines in Fig. 9) and weave around this instead of the leg. Weave twice around. On the thirteenth round, skip this first stake. Go around the next one twice, then skip the next one. Go around the fourth one, and on the last time around, go clear around back to the original added stake (Fig. 9.) This method of weaving around this added stake makes smooth neat work at the front part of the back bow, gives graceful shape and added strength.

Step 11. Bend all stakes down, shaping around back bow or headrest, then proceed to tie off stakes as before.

Step 12. Cut a piece of heavy cardboard the shape of seat. Pad lightly with cotton batting. Lay chintz over this and glue it fast on under side.

Step 13. With three strands of red and three of green fiber cord, make a six-strand braid (Fig. 8.) and tack it around the edges of the seat. Trim all edges close to the body. Lastly give a coat of shellac to all parts excepting the chintz upholstery.

The settee is made in the same general manner as the chair.

A Permanent Thanksgiving

ADVENTURES IN HOME MAKING

By MRS. HARRY A. BURNHAM

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

IT WAS a wise woman who said that she was thankful for the things that she didn't have to have. That is a bit of philosophy which grows in significance as one thinks about it.

A case of direct application of this philosophy has just now come to my attention. A family with whom I am acquainted has been deprived, in the course of the last 14 months, of a large part of their financial income. First one luxury and then another has been crowded off from their list of essentials.

The mother in this home told me, with a restful smile lighting her face, that it had been a wonderful experience to watch how those things that are permanent had seemed to come creeping into their lives when the clutter of multidudinous social engagements and superficial "must have's" had been cleared away.

She mentioned friends as the first item on her list of essentials, and said that, in the days of affluence in money affairs, there had been so much of going; of traveling and pleasure-seeking, that there had been very little time for cultivating those rare friendships which expand only in quiet and unhurried evenings before a fire, or in the wind-swept, sun-bathed hush of tranquil walks along country lanes.

This Thanksgiving Day it will be a good idea to list a few of those things which are really essential to our happiness, and to determine if, after all, we do not have these freely, even though we may have eliminated some of those things that once seemed to us of importance.

I am extremely thankful for the permanent things; those lasting gifts which neither financial lack can take from us, nor financial abundance procure for us. Attics and junk piles are filled with things that money can buy; things that at one time seemed very desirable, perhaps even necessary, when they were purchased. Changing years have drifted by; man-made fashions and customs have dictated their capricious commands and then, just as energetically, revoked them. But through those attic windows one may look calmly at the same unchanging "spacious firmament on high," where

The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the listening earth
Repeats the story of her birth.

Just the same story that was being repeated when Joseph Addison penned his immortal lines more than 200 years ago.

If we are not going to as many concerts this winter as we did last, this very fact may give us time to acquire an inward quietness which will enable us to attune our ears to hear some never-ceasing concerts. Did you ever listen to the cadence and melody of a river flowing underneath the ice? It requires an ear attuned to muted instruments to detect the exquisite beauty of its song; just the same song that it has been singing since the first snows melted and the first waters flowed. Soothing is its message to us when we are not "worried and troubled about many things."

There are so many permanent causes for thanksgiving that it would be impossible to mention them all, but if, just for now, we begin by appreciating and cultivating real friends; by acquiring a deep reverence for the majesty of those things that are "eternal in the heavens" and an ear attuned to the music of the commonplace, which is our inheritance, we shall have a happy and glorious Thanksgiving Day.

DELICIOUS—HOT OR COLD

The Festive Cranberry

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

THE festive, ruby-red color of cranberries, together with their delightfully piquant flavor, makes them a most welcome and decorative addition to the table. They are good when served in the usual way, in the form of either sauce or jelly, but there are many other delicious ways in which they may also be served. Some of these "different" and interesting ways are given below.

Cranberries and Bananas

Cook
1 pint cranberries with
1 cup cold water. When berries are soft, press through a sieve, and add to the hot juice
1½ cups sugar. In a baking dish place
4 to 6 bananas, halved lengthwise, and over them squeeze the juice of ½ lemon. Or
Chopped nut meats may be used instead of the lemon. Pour over this the cranberry juice and bake in a rather hot oven until the bananas are tender. Serve cold. The cranberry juice forms a rich jelly about the bananas.

Harvest Song

(In a City Market)

Grateful hearts have viewed earth's bounty
Since on earth man first was living,
From the ancient Cerialia
To the Puritan Thanksgiving.

We who have not held the plow,
We who have not sowed the seeds—
Shall we pass unheeding now
Such profusion for our needs?

Frequenting a city market
Is no dull and common duty;
Here is fantasy and wonder;
Here is color, form, and beauty.

Golden pyramids of fruit—
Apples of Hesperides?
Clustered grapes; pomegranates rare,
Crimson as Persephone's.

Top-shaped beets; and carrot candles;
Ruby cranberries in bins;
Pumpkins plump; and crook-neck squashes
Like fantastic mandolins.

Cabbages—how intricate
With their leaves so firmly furled;
And the little Brussels sprouts;
And the lettuce, coolly curled.

Brilliant red of ripe tomatoes;
Eggplants' burnished purple hue;
Charming cauliflower nosegays—
Time would fail, to sing their due.

We who have not held the plow,
We who have not sowed or reaped,
Still can share the largess, now,
In a market, harvest-heaped.

EVELYN GOULD.

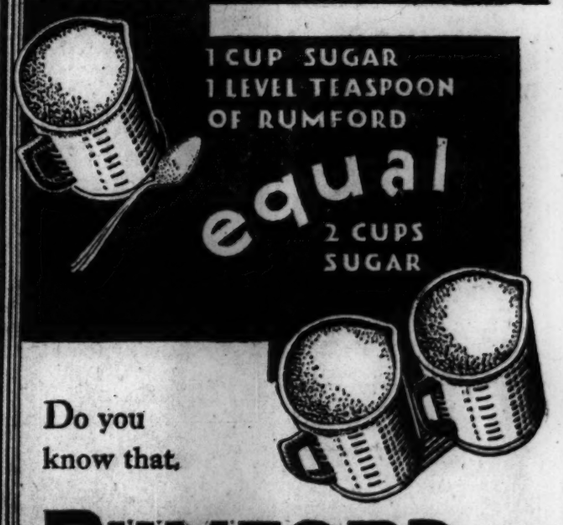
To Sweeten Cranberries



Do you know that,

RUMFORD

ALL-PHOSPHATE

takes the place of sugar in the preparation of certain foods? This is one of the most interesting and important new uses of Rumford. Not that it substitutes for sugar in all cases—far from it. But in sweetening very acid fruits, one level teaspoonful of Rumford with one cup of sugar will produce the same results as when two cups of sugar are used.

In other words, this pure, all-phosphate baking powder neutralizes the acid to a marked degree,—a discovery with a very helpful effect on the housewife's purse, for sugar is a significant item.

Rumford may also be helpful when the question of too much sugar is important, such as in the diet of children. Send for the interesting free booklet, "Giving Delicacy and Flavor to Daily Cooking," and buy a can of Rumford today.

Cricket on the Wold

DURING a fireside conversation the other night, I happened to mention the word Cricket and was promptly asked by my friends to explain the game. Coming, as I do, from the land of cricket, I felt perfectly confident to offer an intelligent reply. Yet, when I attempted to give my two bookish and rather skeptical New England companions a conception of what Old England's cricket means, I was utterly at a loss how to begin. I could not quote Andrew Lang and tell them that cricket is "the end of everyman's desire," for only the Englishman's instinctive philosophy has the key to its meaning. Nor could I say that any mean, underhanded, ungracious act is "not cricket"; for, besides being negative, such an incursion into moral philosophy would leave much unsaid. Nor did I care to invite the humorous incredulity of my friends by describing cricket as a plane of thought, embracing all Englishmen for an appreciable portion of their lives. On the other hand, to explain the wickets, the pitch, the crease and a few rules of the game would hardly distinguish this noble sport from such activities as football, polo, pelota, ninepins, musical chairs, or any other game with rules. So I am afraid my friends are still walking round with the impression that cricket is one of the Englishman's strange ideas of sport—sitting watching a game for hours and days in a state of infinite boredom.

Yet I believe there are ways of explaining what cricket is. And as I watched shortly afterward the showers of autumn leaves floating down from New England's oaks and maples, bringing back memories of glorious events in the final days of the cricket season on the Yorkshire Wolds, it seemed that the charm of cricket might somehow be open to all. Going back to those early days, cricket might be described as a beatific condition divided into several spheres or planes or, as the small boy would think, heavens. The first heaven concerned the daily evening expedition from the old house on Butterdings pavement, facing the market place of the old town, to the common—each member of the family loaded up with such things as bats, pads, balls, gloves, stumps and ball. The common was a great pasture, granted to the town by Archbishop Neville in 1380, or thereabouts, with rights to the freemen to turn in their cows in perpetuity. Neville was a quarrelsome prelate, according to the history books, but a boon to cricketers — except in regard to the arrangement about the cows.

There we played till dusk. Perhaps in the very earliest days the main fun of the game went to the head of the family. At any rate, a scrap of an old Sussex letter, well known in cricket annals, dealing with a much more remote father-at-cricket, seemed strangely familiar. It ran: "Last Monday youre Father was at Mr. Payn's and plaid at Cricket and came home please anuf, for he struck the best ball in the game, and whished he had not anny thing else to do he would play at Cricket all his life."

But cricket grows into the English nature with sinews, tastes and intelligence; and presently, when I succeeded in firing a ball through my father's defenses and upsetting his wicket, so that he no longer resigned his bat, after a long innings, as a mark of charity on his part and impotence on ours, then interest and enthusiasm was more equally shared.

I will not stop to list the intervening celestial spheres of cricket, for it is the "seventh heaven," the most joyful event of the old days on Butterdings, that comes back to me most vividly with the autumn —I mean the annual expedition to the great festival of cricket at Scarborough.

Scarborough was fifty miles away from the old town—an endless journey in a slow, bumpy, unupholstered train of small, four-wheeled coaches. But neither the tedium nor the discomfort of this typical north-country excursion had any chilling effect upon my father or myself, or any of those annual pilgrims who shared our reserved compartment in the train on such occasions.

The morning was still fairly young when we steamed into Scarborough—to me a "spot to real happiness consigned." As I think of all the glittering charms of this ineffable resort, I wonder that the Vikings, in search of a Golden City, went toiling over the long reaches of the Mediterranean when Scarborough was there just opposite their coasts. Scarborough, for the small boy, was an Aladdin's cave all overstocked with its dazzling gems. The town itself was fashionable and gay, with branches of great London emporiums on its narrow windy streets. Beyond the old harbor was the Castle Hill, used by the Romans as a signaling station. Below, at the foot of the cliff, gleamed the turrets and kiosks of the Spa. In the ground beneath your feet was the great subterranean aquarium modeled on the Alhambra. On the sands were blackfaced minstrels, punch and judy shows, donkey ride, caves, hokey-pokey and other delights.

A helter-skelter gallop in a small four-wheeler, drawn by a trim little hack with postilion on its back, was the correct mode of reaching Scarborough's cricket field. A Greek youth of B. C. 776 could not have entered the sacred frontiers of Elis at the Olympiad with greater ecstasy and awe than I entered this famous ground and looked down over that vast expanse of velvet greensward, with Yorkshire's rolling acres disappearing into the haze beyond, the marquees of the nobility on the far side of the ground and the crowd assembling on the benches of the grassy amphitheater on either side.

We arrived in time to perform the solemn rite of viewing the pitch. The pitch is a twenty-two-yard strip of turf in the middle of the field, smooth and flat and green as a billiard table, having at either end a wicket consisting of three stumps—presumably the relic of two four-legged stools, for cricket in its prehistoric days went by the name of stool-ball. All pitches looked pretty much alike, but they were viewed with equal absorption by the faithful ere they took their seats.

A bell rings, the ground clears, the great roller moves away from the pitch, the white-coated umpires walk slowly out from the pavilion and adjust the wicket, the players —heroes of many a Homeric struggle during the season—come onto the ground. You identify them in various ways. "Gentlemen" turn out of one door in the pavilion, "players" out of another—these are cricketing customs and involve no flattery, no affront. "Rangi's" complexion recalls his native India. F. S. Jackson, since Governor of Bombay, dapper and immaculate, wears the M. C. C. cap, Lord Hawke wears his cap peak behind; gaunt, towering Australian Spofforth, looking much like a part in Faust, could be picked out of a million. Then observe this massive giant with long black beard flowing over his white flannels—the great W. G. Grace—powerful and impregnable, whom Michael Angelo would have selected as model for an Abraham or Methusaleh, an emblem of British stability, self-confidence, self-control, a Homeric hero in flannels, pillar of England's cricket from some time in the sixties till 1904, a figure that counted for more to the Englishman of the nineties than Wolseley, Gladstone, Arabi Pasha, Parnell, Lobengula or any other worthy of the day.

Then you settle down to follow the play, contented and absorbed, watching the "overs," waiting while they change the "field," watching more overs, waiting while they change the bowling, watching again, waiting while a new batsman comes in, watching again, waiting while the players take lunch, and on and on—not an intensified struggle like baseball, but a long absorbing process that will not be finished till the next day but one, when you won't be there.

People have laughed at the stoics of the cricket field, that sit motionless and contemplative as gurus on the hard benches beneath England's chill, cloudy skies, sometimes for three days together, watching the slow-moving county match, giving only an occasional murmur of satisfaction when a drive to the boundary enlivens the pace. Yet is not this stoicism in play, this blend of the stoic and the epicurean, so much the Englishman's character that it colors all his thought and his decisions and his philosophy? Indeed, I sometimes think that, if everyone in these days of accentuated movement were compelled to spend one day a week watching cricket—with no motor, no electric button and no radio in reach—some of our most pressing problems might be solved.

Green River

When breezes are soft and skies are fair,
I steal an hour from study and bare,
And hie me away to the woodland scene,
Where wanders the stream with waters of green;
As if the bright fringe of herbs on its brink,
Had given their stain to the wave they drink;
And they, whose meadows it murmurs through,
Have named the stream from its own fair hue.

Yet pure its waters—its shallows are bright
With colored pebbles and sparkles of light,
And clear the depths where its eddies play,
And dimples deepen and whirl away,
And the plane-tree's speckled arms o'er shoot
The swifter current that mines its root,
Through whose shifting leaves, as you walk the hill,
The quivering glimmer of sun and rill,
With a sudden flash on the eye is thrown,
Like the ray that streams from the diamond stone.
Oh, loveliest there the spring days come,
With blossoms, and birds, and wild bees' hum;
The flowers of summer are fairest there,
And freshest the breath of the summer air;
And sweetest the golden autumn day
In silence and sunshine glides away. . . .

George Meredith as Literary Adviser

Forster, it has been said, was a great literary adviser rich in the best traditions of the post; and he was followed, in the office of Chapman & Hall, by a judge of no less distinction, and of a still more fastidious choice. In no respects, perhaps, has the interior economy of a publishing house changed more radically during the last seventy years than in the position of the "reader" or literary adviser. . . .

When John Morley was reader to Macmillan's, and John Forster to Chapman & Hall, the tyro who offered his manuscript to either house was sure of an unbiased and competent verdict, and no one could say that the tradition was lowered, when George Meredith followed Forster, in the autumn of 1860, upon the staff at 193 Piccadilly.

Forster had by then grown tired of the business of reading manuscripts, and indeed, it is always a task that palls in time. There is so much that is neither positively bad nor superlatively good, stuff that might conceivably sell, and yet could hardly add prestige to a publisher's list; and this is the daily bread of the publisher's reader, which soon grows stale and hard. The rare excitement of discovering a gleam of genuine promise atones for a good deal of the drudgery; but drudgery there always must be. The spectacle of the glowing genius of George Meredith, harnessed for more than thirty years to the go-cart of the literary adviser, is a fine example of the discipline to which a strong nature will subject itself in the obligation to earn a living.

George Meredith's name was first associated with that of Chapman & Hall when the firm published The Shaving of Shagpat during the last weeks of 1855. Meredith was at that time twenty-seven years old, and very much oppressed by straitened circumstances. Shagpat was written at Weybridge, "with duns at the door," and it brought in little enough to satisfy those rapacious gentlemen. The book was praised by the discerning (as indeed was inevitable) and George Eliot wrote a couple of highly appreciative reviews; but the sales were small and the remainder of the first edition (a copy of which is now worth between five and ten pounds) was sold off cheap not long after its appearance.

But Edward Chapman always believed in the book, which his daughter remembers him continually acclaiming as "the finest Eastern story outside The Arabian Nights"; and the families of Meredith and Chapman became great friends from the moment of their first meeting. In the summer of 1856 George Meredith, and his little son Arthur, then aged three, spent a holiday with the Chapmans at Folkestone. . . .

The Ordeal of Richard Feverel followed in 1859 and raised Meredith to a definite place among contemporary novelists. It seems extraordinary today to hear that some people were shocked at its frankness, but Meredith told Mr. Clodd years later that Mudie's Library had declined to circulate it. No doubt this helped the book to be talked about; at any rate, after Richard Feverel had made its way, Meredith was about the most promising of Chapman's young novelists, and it is not surprising that, since he cared to undertake the duties of reader to the firm, his services should have been gladly accepted.—From "A Hundred Years of Publishing," by ARTHUR WAUGH.

Du Maurier

Two rocked his infant cradle as he slept,
And crooned for him their native lullabies.
One gave her sense of beauty to his eyes,
One taught his heart her smiles, the tears she wept.
Each made him love her as the child his home,
And, mother-wise, reclaimed his wandering glance:
Beloved England and beloved France,—
Each drew him, though, afar, he could not come!

In his imagination, fleur-de-lis
And English daisy blossomed side by side,
And dreams were his, lost transports to renew.
Half exiled whereso'er he chanced to be,
Like migrant birds his thoughts went soaring wide,
Wooed onward by the vision of the true!

A Corner of Bellagio, in the Italian Lakes: From a Drawing by B. T. Stephenson

MUCH praise has been recorded of the Italian Lakes, yet with each visit their radiant beauty appeals to one afresh. Here, life seems so simple, so gay, so effortless, that at first the visitor walks about with careful tread lest he break into and disturb a scene in a play. The moonlight on the water seems not quite real, the low voices and the music might be answering a director's cue. An incredibly lovely play progresses as if for his benefit alone.

The next morning, from his window in a villa high above the town of Bellagio, such a panorama meets his eyes as more than ever to convince him that he is not wide awake. The lakes, Como and Lecco, with their surrounding mountains, tiny rosy villages clustering at their feet, colored sails of fishing-boats and smiling people in no particular hurry, still make him feel like a rank outsider, in detachment viewing an animated canvas.

With breakfast under the trees of the terrace, the view is still unchanged; the bees hum about the honey jar on the table, the waiter is solicitous and a desire is felt to take an active part in this spectacle. Centuries ago, Bellagio was beloved by the Romans and here on the top of the hill are the remains of a Roman villa. Acres of beautifully landscaped walks encircle the top of the hill, a fascinating labyrinth so high above the lake that boats are reduced to toy things.

Courage to descend into the morning activity of the town is soon increased by curiosity and the descent, by ancient stone stairs hung with flowering vines, offers many an intimate glimpse into the balconies and courtyards of the houses. Everyor is so friendly—no frowning face or skulking figure mars the feeling of welcome at every turn. Soon the stairs become wider, become broad stone steps over which mules and people travel with ease, past shops which display all their goods on the steep sidewalks. All the drama of life is played in the streets, and all to the accompaniment of music.

Down to the shores of the lake the visitor at last finds his way. Boats, bathers, shops, cafés are framed in the dazzling cobalt of water and sky, while in the cool caverns of the narrow streets, mothers nod "Buon Giorno," children laugh and young girls shyly smile. Old fountains play as they have done for centuries and, beside an ancient town spring, a wandering musician pauses to drink.

The sights, the sounds, the smells are of Italy, the joyousness, the music and laughter continue always, except for one brief hour of siesta, when the populace vanishes like magic. Gone are the players, quiet is the music, silent are the voices and the laughter; but the curtain is still up, the spectacle remains.

Marcher vers la Lumière

Traduction de l'article anglais de Science Chrétienne paraissant sur cette même page

UN AUTEUR a dit: "Si l'adversité vous harcèle et que vous ne sachiez plus de quel côté vous tourner, poursuivez votre marche." Une maxime de ce genre est souvent un encouragement, car en bien des occasions les épreuves et les difficultés de ce monde matériel prétendent nous accabler. Les humains se trouvent fréquemment en face du malheur, de la maladie ou du mal sous une de ses formes diverses; et dans ces situations, pleurer ne sert de rien. Les larmes de celui qui se désespère et s'apitoie sur son propre sort ne font qu'accentuer les ombres du tableau. L'égoïsme et la contemplation persistente de l'erreur perpétuent la croyance à l'erreur.

Un Scientiste Chrétien se trouva un jour sur le point d'être englouti par les flots du malheur. Dans son désir d'être guidé, il ouvrit la Bible et lut ces paroles d'Ésaïe: "Le peuple, qui marchait dans les ténèbres, a vu briller une grande lumière." Cet avertissement le frappa vivement, car l'erreur semblait le serrer de très près et il lui paraissait impossible de marcher dans des ténèbres aussi effroyables. Cependant cette manière de procéder paraissait préférable à une soumission passive ou à une endurance stoïque vis-à-vis du mal; et le désir d'obéir à ce message apporta la première lueur de réconfort. Mrs. Eddy écrit à la page 357 du livre de texte de la Science Chrétienne, Science et Santé avec la Clef des Ecritures (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures): "Nous soutenons la Vérité, non en acceptant le mensonge, mais en le rejetant." Il était donc possible d'avancer d'un pas en refusant d'admettre qu'il n'y avait plus rien à faire et que tout était perdu. Le découragement, la crainte et le doute pouvaient être résolument écartés; l'espérance et la foi en Dieu pouvaient être accueillies et servir d'appui et d'encouragement.

"L'homme qui pense," a-t-on dit, "est le pire ennemi que puisse avoir le prince des ténèbres;" et cette affirmation nous oblige à chercher ce qui constitue le penser véritable. Nous croyons parfois être absorbés dans des pensées profondes alors que nous nous contentons de repasser les diverses phases de la routine matérielle ou de désirer quelque chose. Or "le prince des ténèbres" n'a jamais été mis en fuite par des méditations de ce genre, comme bien des mortels l'ont découvert à leur grand désappointement.

Ceux qui étudient la Science Chrétienne apprennent que les pensées émanant de Dieu et constamment reflétées par l'idée spirituelle, ou l'homme, constituent le seul penser véritable. Ces pensées-là sont toujours constructives; elles exaltent le caractère et les capacités des hommes, et produisent l'harmonie et la guérison. Avec de telles pensées, l'effort fait pour nous mettre en marche et pour avancer nous amènera tôt ou tard à la lumière du succès et de la santé, loin de l'obscurité et du mesmérisme des fausses croyances. Chacun peut prouver pour son propre compte que les pensées d'amour, de confiance, de paix, allègent et finalement détruisent la haine, la crainte et le mal quel qu'il soit.

Lorsque le mal se présentait à lui, le Psalmiste était à même d'exprimer avec conviction sa confiance en Dieu. "Si je passe par l'adversité, tu me rendras la vie," disait-il; et ailleurs encore: "Si je dis: 'Seules les ténèbres pourront me cacher . . .' alors la nuit même devient lumière autour de moi." Grâce à l'étude de la Bible jointe à celle du livre de texte de la Science Chrétienne, une foule de gens ont été capables d'avancer malgré les plus sombres présages. Les arguments subtils de l'erreur doivent être rejetés en faveur des vraies pensées concernant l'univers spirituel, que Dieu connaît.

Jésus dit: "Je suis la lumière du monde. Celui qui me suit ne marchera pas dans les ténèbres, mais il aura la lumière de la vie." Au sein même des sombres et menaçantes suggestions du mal, nous pouvons connaître par expérience cette "lumière de la vie;" peut-être semble-t-elle d'abord bien faible, mais elle éclairera suffisamment chacun de nos pas; et s'ils se portent en avant, les petits pas eux-mêmes assurent le progrès. Le laps de temps qui paraît nécessaire pour passer des ténèbres à la lumière est généralement proportionné à notre bon vouloir et à notre désir de suivre la Vérité. L'entendement humain hésite parfois à prendre le chemin de la Vérité et de l'Amour, car ce chemin paraît rude et étroit à qui s'est longtemps livré aux plaisirs des sens; tel trouvera peut-être que ses progrès sont lents; mais s'il s'applique avec persévérance à la contemplation et à la manifestation du bien, son sentier sera béni et embelli par des victoires sur le péché et la maladie.

Il est parfois fort encourageant de jeter un regard en arrière et de constater les progrès accomplis au cours d'un certain nombre de mois ou d'années. Comparant notre caractère et nos habitudes avec notre ancienne manière de penser et de vivre, nous verrons que les progrès sont dûs à la fidélité et à l'amour qui ont été exprimés dans des circonstances pénibles. Si le mal qui doit être déraciné semble tenace, nous avons encore lieu d'être reconnaissants, car la nécessité de le surmonter mettra en jeu la patience, l'humilité, la persévérance, la joie, la tolérance, la bonté, le dévouement; nous acquerrons ainsi la force de caractère qui nous permettra de faire face à d'autres suggestions erronées et d'aider notre prochain.

"La lumière se lève, même au sein des ténèbres, pour les hommes droits;" ainsi sans se laisser effrayer, le disciple de la Science Chrétienne peut continuer calmement sa marche; plongeant ses regards dans l'infini du bien, il apprend à voir plus haut et plus loin que l'épreuve du moment; il est conscient de la présence divine, quoiqu'elle soit invisible aux sens matériels. Mrs. Eddy écrit (Science et Santé, p. 503): "La Science divine, la Parole de Dieu, dit aux ténèbres à la surface de l'erreur: 'Dieu est Tout-en-tout,' et la lumière de l'Amour toujours présent illumine l'univers."

Walking Toward the Light

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

A WRITER once said, "If pressed into the corner of adversity and you do not know which way to turn, go on." Such sentences are often encouraging, for in this material world there seem to be many occasions when trials and difficulties threaten to overwhelm. Human beings are frequently confronted by disaster, disease, or one of the varying phases of evil; and in such a case nothing can be gained by weeping. Tears of self-pity and despair only add to the doleful aspects of the situation. Selfishness and self-centered contemplation of error perpetuate belief in error.

A Christian Scientist once seemed about to be completely submerged in adversity. As he turned to the Bible for guidance, these words from Isaiah were read: "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." The admonition arrested attention in a somewhat startling fashion, for error seemed pressing in so closely that it did not appear possible to walk in the darkness that looked so appalling. It sounded more constructive, however, than meekly to submit to or stoically endure the evil, and the desire to be obedient to this message brought the first ray of comfort. Mrs. Eddy writes in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 357), "We sustain Truth, not by accepting, but by rejecting a lie." A step forward could be taken by refusing to admit the argument that all was lost, and that nothing could be done. Discouragement, fear, and doubt could be resolutely dismissed, and hope and faith in God could be welcomed in to sustain and cheer.

Someone has said, "A thinking man is the worst enemy the prince of darkness can have," and such a statement compels us to consider what sort of thoughts constitute real thinking. Sometimes people feel that they are deep in thought when they are merely going over the various phases of material routine or wishing for something. Yet "the prince of darkness" has never been put to flight by any such train of ponderings, as mortals have discovered to their disappointment.

Students of Christian Science learn that thoughts which emanate from God, and which the spiritual idea, man, constantly reflects, constitute the only real thinking. Such thoughts are always constructive and elevate one's character and ability, producing harmony and healing. Making the effort to start forward, accompanied by such thoughts, will eventually bring one to the light of success and health, and away from the obscurity and mesmerism of false belief. Everyone can prove for himself that thoughts of love, confidence, peace, alleviate and ultimately destroy hate, fear, and all evil.

When evil presented itself to the Psalmist, he was able with conviction to express his trust in God, saying, "Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me;" and again, "If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me." The study of the Bible, together with the Christian Science textbook, has enabled many people to press forward, no matter how black the outlook. Subtle arguments of error must be rejected in favor of true thoughts about the spiritual universe, which God knows.

Jesus said, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." This "light of life" may be experienced even in the midst of dark, clamorous suggestions of evil; and though it seem faint at first, it will sufficiently illumine one step at a time; and even short steps forward assure advancement. The period of time that seems to be required to get from darkness to the light is usually proportionate to one's willingness to follow Truth. The human mind does not always want to take the path of Truth and Love, which seems exacting and narrow to one who has long indulged in sensuous pleasure; to such a one, progress may seem slow, but as he persistently applies himself to the contemplation and manifestation of good, his way will be blessed with victories over sin and disease.

It is sometimes most encouraging to look back over a period of months or years, that we may note an encouraging improvement in character and habits, as compared with former modes of thinking and living, which has been brought about by faithfulness and love expressed under trying circumstances. If the evil to be eradicated seems persistent, even then there is cause for gratitude, for its overcoming will call forth patience, humility, perseverance, joy, tolerance, kindness, unselfishness, thus making for strength of character with which to meet other suggestions of error and to help others.

"Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness," so that the Christian Science student may walk calmly on, unafraid, learning to look above and beyond the immediate trial into infinite good, conscious of God's presence, even though invisible to the material senses. Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 503), "Divine Science, the Word of God, saith to the darkness upon the face of error, 'God is All-in-all,' and the light of ever-present Love illumines the universe."

The River That Made Egypt

Far away in the very heart of equatorial Africa, a little south of the Equator, there rises one of the greatest and most famous rivers of the world. The beginnings of the Nile are in one of the remotest and least civilized bits of the earth's surface, and the greater part of its course lies either through equatorial swamps or through barren deserts; but before it has finished its long journey of four thousand miles, and reached the Mediterranean, it has travelled through the greatest kingdom of the ancient world, and its broad stream has reflected the towers and colonnades of vast temples which mark the spots where once stood the proudest cities of a great empire. For thousands of years its waters bore upon their bosom the gilded barges of famous kings and of mighty gods, while the ships of all nations, from Crete, from Tyre, from Sidon and Byblos, even at last from far-off Athens and the Islands of the Ægean, swept up the stream before the strong north wind to unload at the quays of Memphis or of Thebes; and drifted down again with the current, laden with all the fine and beautiful things which the cunning workmen of Egypt knew so well how to make.

But the Nile was not only the witness of the splendour of Ancient Egypt, not even only a helper in the making of it: it actually made the whole land in the beginning, and it kept on remaking it year by year, and is remaking it still. For a long way after the start of its journey it runs, as I have said, through great swamps, where its current is almost choked by huge masses of matted reeds (the "sudd"), which have to be cut through periodically to clear a channel. Then it comes out at last into more open country, which is barren and desolate on either bank; and just at Khartum another great river, the Blue Nile, comes rolling down from the hills of Abyssinia to join the slower current of the longer stream, the White Nile, as the equatorial river is called. The united stream flows on past the battlefield of Omdurman, where the last hope of the Dervishes was shattered to pieces. It passes the first of the six great steps, the Cataracts, down which it has to fall before it reaches Egypt, and gliding past the ruins of what was once the famous city of Meroë, it reaches the point where another mountain torrent from the Abyssinian hills comes flowing in from the east to join it. . . .

The Nile has really made Egypt, and goes on making it afresh every year, as it has done for untold hundreds of years. All the black soil which fills the flat valley has been laid down by the river in the course of ages, and it is refreshed and kept fruitful year by year by the same flood which made it in the beginning. And it is the black soil that is Egypt. The Egyptians themselves, in ancient days, used to call Egypt "The Black Land," to distinguish it from the red deserts which lay on either hand. . . . Egypt, then, the first of the lands of our story, is simply the ribbon of fertile land which lies on either side of the great river which has created it, and the broad triangle which lies between the end of the ribbon and the Mediterranean. Or, if you like it better, we might say that Egypt is like a lily, whose long stem, rather crooked in places, is the Nile, and whose broad bloom is the Delta.—JAMES BAIKIE, in "The Ancient East and Its Story."

QUIET UPWARD MOVEMENT IN STOCK MARKET

Moderately Good Gains Are Stimulated by Short Covering

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP)—The stock market took on a little happier complexion today, but was still extremely sluggish.

The decline of the last two sessions was checked, and prices stiffened moderately, several issues getting up a point or two, but trading was in small volume, with floor traders apparently contributing much of the activity.

Late prices were generally higher, but extreme gains of a point or so had in most instances been reduced to fractions. Corn Products, National Biscuit, R. H. Macy and McKeesport Tin Plate went into the final dealings with advances of about a point.

U. S. Steel lost its moderate early rise. American Telephone, American Can, Case, Harvester, Chrysler and Eastman averaged half a point higher.

Sales approximated 700,000 shares.

Mercantile Reviews Optimistic

Short covering appeared to provide much of the upward impetus, and the weekly mercantile reviews were moderately optimistic. Dun's reported that retail trade had expanded further, helped by cold weather.

Bradstreet's stressed the post-election stiffening of commodity prices as particularly hopeful.

Nevertheless, brokerage opinion remained decidedly mixed. The weekly report of freight car loadings, to appear tomorrow, was expected to show a further seasonal decline, following the usual trend in November and December.

Hesitancy in the securities markets was described as reflecting in part the uncertain status of the war debt payments, due Dec. 15, together with possible reactions upon sterling exchange. Furthermore, the approach of the December session of the old Congress, with the possibility that further taxes may be sought to bring the federal budget into actual balance, was also regarded as an influence toward uncertainty.

Bond Market Quiet

Operations in the bond market continued to follow a narrow range today with little or no activity apparent except in a few specialties.

Dealers were rather encouraged by the steadiness of the higher grade investment groups, most of which during the last several weeks have resisted all efforts to dislodge them from their firm positions. Fractional gains in these departments have generally outnumbered trivial losses.

Traders and investors still had one eye focused on economic conditions and the other on the foreign debt situation. Both of these factors in the current movement of bond prices were beset with various uncertainties. Some statistical services estimate that tomorrow's freight car loadings report for the week ended Nov. 12 will show a drop of around 50,000, which would be more than a seasonal decline.

While some secondary rail obligations displayed a moderately firming tendency, others failed to show any change from previous quotations. Small advances were recorded by issues of Alleghany Corp, Santa Fe, Baltimore & Ohio, St. Paul, Chicago & North Western, Pennsylvania and Frisco. Canadian Pacific loans were a trifle lower, as were some bonds of Erie.

A few of the semispeculative utilities rallied. Among these were maturities of International Telephone and Postal Telegraph. Several of the industrials improved, including Dodge Bros. 6s, which added more than a point to their yesterday's gains. Firmness was also shown by issues of Goodyear, Phillips Petroleum, Shell Union Oil, Armour & Co., and Sinclair Oil.

The foreign section was mixed and generally dull. The Germans recovered mildly after their yesterday's uneasiness coincident with the von Papen Cabinet resignation. Bonds of Japan were heavy while French 7½s sold higher.

United States Government bonds were quiet and steady.

COTTON PROGRAM ADVOCATED

NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 18 (AP)—A one-variety cotton program is advocated by H. G. Safford, vice-president of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, as a means of improving quality and combating a weakened market. Mr. Safford, who returned here today from a meeting of cotton farmers at Hattiesburg, said Mississippi planters who used the system are realizing a better yield per acre and getting a better price per pound for their crop.

COTTON MARKET QUIET

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP)—Except for further evening-up of the December position and switching into later months, no special trading feature developed in cotton today, and fluctuations were irregular within a narrow range. Slight early declines were followed by rallies on trade buying and covering, but after selling up from 6.40 to 6.47, March eased to 6.42. The mid-afternoon market was quiet at net declines of 2 or 3 points.

AUTOCAR CO. GETS CONTRACT

ARDMORE, Penna., Nov. 18—The Autocar Company, motor truck manufacturers, announce the receipt of an order from the United States Navy Department at Washington for 32 new type heavy duty motor trucks. They are to be delivered to naval stations in this country and to stations in almost every foreign possession of the United States.

CHEVROLET INCREASES WORKERS

DETROIT, Nov. 18—Chevrolet Motor Company has increased substantially its working forces during the past few weeks. Pay roll at the main plant in Flint is now approximately $900. More than 3900 men are employed at the Saginaw foundry and 736 in the Bay City plant, where carburetors and other small parts are manufactured.

WARNER-QUINLAN NET LOSS

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP)—Warner-Quinlan Company reports a consolidated net loss of $1,218,129 for the nine months ended Sept. 30, compared with a loss of $130,183 in the 1931 period. Loss in the September quarter was $439,274, compared with a loss of $347,499 in the preceding quarter and a deficiency of $22,849 a year ago.

MOST CLASSES OF LIVESTOCK SHOW DECLINE

Heavier Receipts and Dull Market for Meats Are Chief Factors

Special from Monitor Bureau

CHICAGO, Nov. 18—Declines were scored in markets for all classes of livestock at the stock yards this week, sharply increased receipts over a week ago, along with dull and lower markets for meat, being the main bearish features, according to a report of the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Fed steers and yearlings lost 50 cents to $1, weights showing the most decline, while weighty beeves and common grade of all weights occasionally showed only a 25-cent drop. Yearling heifers came in for the full decline, while butcher heifers and beef cows lost about 50 cents, low cutter and cutter cows 25 cents, bulls 10 to 15 cents, and vealers $1. Lightweight replacement cattle ruled strong to 25 cents higher and heavy feeders weak to 25 cents lower.

An extreme top of $8.10 was paid for long yearlings early in the week, the practical top being $8, along with medium and heavy-weight steers. At the close, choice grade steers and yearlings sold below $7, bulk of the run $5 to $7.

Both light and heavy heifers made $7, a load of heavies $7.10 and package of lights $7.25, with bulk fed heifers $4.50-$6 late. Most beef cows turned at $2.50-$3.25, best around $4, low cutters and cutters $1.50-$2.25. The practical top on weighty sausage bulls was $3.40 at the close. Selected vealers scored $5.50.

The general hog market broke 25 to mostly 40 cents, lightweights showing the least decline. Pigs and packing sows eased downward 10-20 cents. The top on Thursday was $3.75, paid for light lights, 180-300 pound weights making $3.56 early in the day, but the bulk sold late at $3.40-$3.50. Pigs brought $3.25-$3.75 and packing sows $2.80-$3.25.

Fat lambs declined 25-75 cents, while feeding lambs held steady and fat ewes ruled strong. Fat lambs topped at $6.25 early in the week and $5.75 at the close, bulking at $5.25-$5.50 late. Fat ewes sold mainly at $1.50-$2.25. Mixed fat and feeding lambs went to the country at $5.35.

Music

"La Forza del Destino"

Boston Opera House—The San Carlo Grand Opera Company last night presented Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" for the delectation of an enthusiastic audience greatly surpassing in size those which have been the rule during the current season (with the brilliant exception of that which had greeted Mme. Jeritza on the preceding night). From an exceptionally able cast of singers (and no less can do justice to the opera) there resulted an excellent performance of one of Verdi's richest scores—a work packed so lavishly with music spirited, persuasive, touching, dramatic, beautiful, and in a style in which lyric spontaneity and artistic and technical maturity are so happily mated that surely only the romantic Spanish extravagances of a libretto over-free with slaughter, multiple disguises, coincidences, conflicts 'twixt love and parental duty, friendship and honor, and so forth, prevent its becoming the favorite of the Verdian repertoire.

While the opera was especially fortunate in the excellent singing of its principals, singly and in its many admirable concerted numbers, yet the sensitive and well-balanced playing of the orchestra under Mr. Carlo Peroni contributed notably to the result, while the work of the chorus also was more than usually creditable.

As Leonora, Mme. Blanca Saroya availed herself fully of the superb and varied opportunities offered her and used her beautiful and amply expressive voice brilliantly and appealingly. Mr. Aroldo Lindi's robust and ringing tenor, with its clarion-like high notes, was thoroughly suited to the rôle of Don Alvaro, but the fury of sword-brandishing elicited by Don Carlos's final and successful attempt to goad him into duel seemed to agree ill with the tradition of the Spanish nobleman's invincible restraint. Mr. Mario Valle, as the implacable would-be avenger, sang impressively. The amusing Fra Melitone of Mr. Natale Cervi and Miss Bernice Schalker's sparkling performance as the little gypsy Preziosilla provided welcome relief from the weighty matters of the main plot. Mr. Amund Sjovik made a sonorous and dignified Padre Quardiano, and Miss Leonora Demora as Curra and Mr. Francesco Curci as Mastro Trabuco effectively and efficiently rounded out the cast.

S. S.

Ruth Culbertson

Last night in Jordan Hall Miss Ruth Culbertson, pianist, played the following program: Weber, Sonata in A flat, Op. 39; Mozart, Sonata in A minor; Schubert, Three Impromptus from Op. 142; Chopin, Nocturne in B major, Three Mazurkas and the Polonaise Fantaisie, Op. 61.

Such a program, however well done, becomes monotonous. Now that Miss Culbertson has brought to a hearing the Weber sonata, we cheerfully concede it a place in the library beside, say, the Schumann "Symphonic Variations." Nor are we able to muster much enthusiasm for the Schubert Impromptus, although Miss Culbertson played the one in B flat with grace and delicacy or clear-cut brilliance when the score so demanded. Her Mozart was singularly detached, with phrases well clipped and tones coolly crisp. Of elegance or repose there was little. Miss Culbertson has yet to acquire the art of penetrating beneath the surface—or possibly she needs to acquire the art of revealing to her audience that which she has found. Not until she reached the Chopin group did she begin to sound the note for which we listened. Possibly she finds herself more in tune with this composer than with the others represented upon her program. Certain it is that she drew a fine climax to the Polonaise. With her present equipment of adequate technique she would do well to explore more thoroughly the literature which would bring much-needed and colorful contrast to her programs. Her audience gave her warm applause and recalled her many times.

Boston Art Notes

Boys' and Girls' Bookshop

The arts are so accessible in these days that no one can complain of being deprived of the pleasures they give. If music is transmitted through the ether, pictures are being distributed through the perfected medium of colored reproduction. When we have not the opportunity to see a Vermeer or a Renoir in the original, we may do the next best thing, make an effort to see the prints which have been made to simulate as carefully as possible the originals. In France and Germany the processes are being perfected.

At the Bookshop for Boys and Girls in Boylston Street, there has been assembled and hung a collection of these reproductions. Modern painters have been selected. The qualities which distinguish the recent schools may be felt, such qualities, say, as the free and generous use of color, the veiled or diaphanous effects of impressionism. The reproductions catch even the brushwork of the originals. One may note how the thickly applied strokes reflect the light, and how the painters resort to small dabs of vivid color to produce vibration in the tones. The luminosity and the dynamics sought by these painters—Monet, Pissaro, Utrillo—exhibit their contribution to new methods of handling and expressing more richly the beauty of the outdoors.

It would be foolish to assert that the reproductions are as effective as the originals. Naturally, they are not. Ultimately the work of art is judged for those traits which it acquires from the very touch of the painter's hand, from the character of the pigment, from the most delicate nuances which result when the hand holds the brush and the brush touches the canvas. In the reproduction there is an added element, the inks and chemicals, the mechanical pressures and mixtures, and finally the picture struck off upon paper rather than canvas. With allowances for these intrusions, one may still genuinely enjoy these reproductions.

Gardenside Bookshop

At the Gardenside Bookshop there is a display of oil and charcoal portraits by Patricia Marshall Tate. The charcoals show a notable talent, an ability to reveal character, a sensitiveness to surface textures and a freedom in the manipulation of the medium.

Good Housekeeping Approves Birdseye Foods
WITH ITS SEAL OF APPROVAL GOOD HOUSEKEEPING ANSWERS "YES" TO THESE QUESTIONS YOU'VE BEEN ASKING ABOUT BIRDSEYE FROSTED FOODS.
Are they different from ordinary frozen foods? . . . Are they fresh-flavored? . . . Are they convenient? . . . Are they clean, sanitary? . . . Are they wholesome, nutritious? . . . Are they of standard quality? . . . If you have been asking these questions about Birdseye Foods, it is only natural that you should, for it is hard to believe that frozen foods can be actually "fresher than fresh." . . . But an ever growing number of Birdseye users has answered "yes" to these questions, and has put the stamp of public approval on these modern miracle foods. And now, backing up the public's judgment with the findings of experts, Good Housekeeping stamps them with its approval.

THE modern cash register can trace its development through 6000 years, for there is evidence that the ancients used a registering system that showed to the buyer and seller the amount involved.

The first cash register of our modern period was a device that punched holes in a strip of paper. The merchant had to count these holes to check up on the amount of cash that the cash drawer should contain. This machine was invented by Jacob Ritty of Dayton, Ohio, in 1879.

While the latest machine gives almost a stenographic record of the day's business, including the date, amount, clerk's name, receipts, etc., it still retains its original name of Cash Register.

Quotation for Today

TRUTH and love are two of the most powerful things in the world; and when they both go together they cannot easily be withstood.—CUDWORTH.

Hymnal Notes

No. 272

Prepared for The Christian Science Monitor

THOMAS TALLIS (1510-85) is sometimes called the father of English cathedral music, though his associate Byrd was also very active in music of that time. Tallis's position was nowhere clearly recorded, but he appears to have been a "gentleman of the Chapel Royal" under Henry VIII, Edward VI and Mary, and "master" under Elizabeth.

This tune, No. 272, is a canon and is still in general use. A "canon" is a strict "imitation," in which a second voice takes up the first melody and repeats it throughout. Here, in the tenor, at the words, "where'er the sun," this echo of the soprano melody begins and continues to their uniting at the close. A popular "round," such as "Row, row, row your boat," illustrates the canon form, which may use two or several voices in imitation.

Of Tallis it is said that "the difficulties of music were to him as child's play." Some of his work is almost worthy to be ranked with that of Palestrina. His greatest composition is a motet arranged for 40 voices, in eight choirs of five parts each. Moffatt cites an opinion that this is "probably the noblest achievement of the English nation in sacred music." (A motet is unaccompanied music, where each voice-part has its own melody. It is set to sacred words.)

The words of No. 272 are by Isaac Watts (1674-1748), one of the early poets of English hymnody, whose large output of verse came chiefly when he was 22 years old. Indeed, his work is spoken of as the quarry from which hymnists have long drawn for their own work. Watts, of course, drew on the Bible, and his volume of Psalms has the title: "The Psalms of David Imitated in the Language of the New-Testament and Applied to the Christian State and Worship. By I. Watts, D. D."

The hymns are entitled: "Hymns and Spiritual Songs. In Three Books. I. Collected from the Scriptures. II. Composed on divine Subjects. III. Prepared for the Lord's Supper." The words used for this hymn are from Psalm 72.

Watts was the son of an English Nonconformist who was twice imprisoned for his religious opinions. Isaac was ordained in 1702 as pastor over the distinguished congregation of Independents of Mark Lane, London. His health seeming to fail, he became a lifelong guest at the beautiful country estate of Sir Thomas Abney. He received honorary degrees from the universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen, and a monument was erected to him in Westminster Abbey. His gentleness and piety and his cheerfulness in distress earned for him the name of the Melanchthon of his day. Up to the middle of the last century Watts's catechisms, his Scripture History, and Divine and Moral Songs were still the books most in use for the religious education of children.

Dr. Johnson included Watts in his Lives of the Poets, for it may perhaps be said of him, as was said once of Coleridge, that he has lines enough of pure poetry, if they were culled from the mass of his work, to make a book of gold.

The Earl of Selborne ranked Watts as the father of English hymnody, though Watts had the example of Psalmodists who preceded him. Hymns had indeed become an accepted part of public worship among the Baptists and Independents at the close of the seventeenth century; but to what Julian calls Watts's "healthy strength of thought and a habit of broad jubilant praise," later writers owe much. Watts had a way of breaking into sudden beauty amid a wilderness of dry lines—as in "Run quickly up the shining way to meet my blessed Lord," or "Let me within thy courts be seen, Like a young cedar fresh and green." Watts's hymns were also the first to show what Montgomery was later to define as necessary to a right hymn: that it have "a beginning, a middle and an end."

These words have a modern setting in Hymn No. 271.

The Children's Corner

Percy or Edward—Captain of the Football Team?

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

"I SUPPOSE, Uncle Peter," said Jimmie, "that by this time Percy Pig and Edward Elephant are back in school."

"They have resumed their educations," said Uncle Peter. "When the teacher opened the door, who should be sitting on the doorstep but Percy Pig and Edward Elephant?"

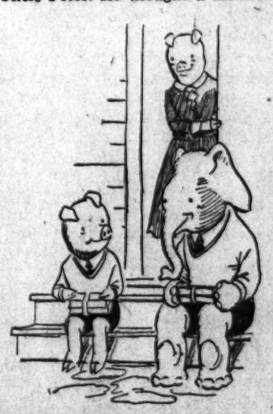
"I suppose," said Jennie, "that Edward had carried Percy's books and Percy had carried Edward's books."

"Edward was just thanking Percy for carrying his books," said Uncle Peter, "and Percy was just thanking Edward."

"What have they been doing since school began, Uncle Peter?" said Jimmie.

"I think you might tell us a story about them," said Jennie.

"Let me think a moment," said Uncle Peter. He thought a moment.



Who Should Be Sitting on the Doorstep but Percy and Edward.

"It was not long after school had opened," continued Uncle Peter, "and in their happy home the Pigs were at supper, Mr. and Mrs. Pig, baby Penelope Pig, Aunt Polly Pig, and Percy Pig. And at about the same time the Elephants—Mr. and Mrs. Elephant, baby Elinor Elephant, and Master Edward Elephant—were also at supper in their happy home. And in both families they were talking about the same thing, which was the football team in Edward's and Percy's school. Both Mr. Elephant and Mr. Pig had played football when they were boys, and they were very much interested, and so were Mrs. Elephant and Mrs. Pig, who had both sewed a lot of extra padding into Edward's and Percy's football uniforms.

"'It sounds like a strong team,' said Mr. Pig.

"'You see I am one of the guards, said Percy, 'and Edward is the other guard.'

"'A stout pair of guards,' commented Mr. Pig. 'Who is your captain?'

"'The boys are going to vote for captain tomorrow,' said Percy. 'Some of them wanted me to run for captain, but I told them that was very foolish when Edward would be so much better. So I think it will be Edward.'

"'That was sweet of you, Percy,' said Mrs. Pig. 'But I'm sure you would make just as good a captain as Edward.'

"'Oh, no, Mamma, indeed no,' said Percy Pig. 'I shall try to do my best as guard, but Edward is a real leader.'

"'And at just about the same time," continued Uncle Peter, "Mr. Elephant was asking the same question of Edward. 'Who,' said Mr. Elephant, 'is going to be captain of this powerful aggregation of football heroes?'

"'I know what Edward said," said Jimmie. "He said Percy."

"You are quite right," said Uncle Peter. "'Some of the boys,' said Edward, 'wanted me to run for captain. But I told them that was a very foolish idea when Percy Pig would be so much better. Of course, Mamma and Papa, I hope I shall do very well as guard. But Percy is a real leader.'

"'I should think," said Jennie, "that the football team would have had to choose somebody else captain."

"Well, the next day after school," said Uncle Peter, "the members of the team got together to elect a captain. Each member wrote something on a slip of paper, and all the slips were handed to the teacher, and there was great suspense while the teacher looked at them. 'We now come,' said the teacher, 'to the election of a captain for our football team, and I am glad to see that the choice is practically unanimous. There is one vote for Percy Pig and there is one vote for Edward Elephant. But all the rest of the votes are for Percy Pig and Edward Elephant or for Edward Elephant and Percy Pig. The captain of the football team is Percy Edward Elephant Pig.'"

Feeding the Hungry

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Oakland, Calif.

"THREE Oakland men feed 200 families a day!" Such a heading appeared in a recent issue of one of the local newspapers.

In the Elmhurst district of Oakland there seem to be many destitute families. A few months ago three men living in the district, realizing that now is the time to help, organized the Elmhurst Relief Center; and friends, firemen, and policemen were soon recruited to aid in the collection and distribution of food. A vacant store was provided for headquarters, and the work began.

Every morning at 7 o'clock these men drive a truck to the commission district and gather up the fruit and vegetables that in a day or so would have to be withdrawn from sale. Bakers of the East Bay district give liberal donations of bread, and the stores of the neighborhood also help. In the afternoon the three good Samaritans take their truck and, accompanied by some volunteer workers, make the rounds of the truck gardens. The volunteer workers help the farmers with their work, and in return, the workers receive the surplus for the food center. Inspectors examine the food carefully to be sure that it is fit for human consumption.

At 11 o'clock the doors are open, and the work of distribution begins. For three or four hours food is supplied to needy men, women, and children. No one is turned away, and in some cases enough food is given to supply families of six or seven. This work is to be kept up as long as there is need for this kind of relief.

Notes and Queries

Prepared for The Christian Science Monitor

The u in circus, locust (I. S. G.)—This is the clipped u (shown as an italicized short u) which might better be described as the short u in unstressed syllables (cf. submit, voluntary, circumstance). In formal speech it not uncommonly receives the full value of the short u as in but; in ordinary conversation, however, the sound frequently becomes obscured.

The a in Roman, loyal, urban (I. S. G.)—Here we have the clipped short a (shown in italics), which, like the clipped short u, loses much of its value in ordinary conversation. It is found in unstressed first syllables closed by a consonant in spelling: account, accrue, adjust, and is also recognized in unstressed final syllables closed with a consonant: final, mortal, vacant, madam. In formal speaking or reading this a retains much of its short quality as in hat, bat, cat.

The a in circular (I. S. G.)—This is the intermediate (one-dot) a as in ask, when employed in open, unaccented syllables: abound, diadem, sofa. In formal speech the vowel has much of the one-dot sound so familiar in path, pass, dance, master, command.

In previous editions of Webster's, in fact, no discrimination was made between the a in ask and the one in sofa. In the present dictionary's phonetic respellings, however, this vowel is italicized, indicating the allowable tendency to obscure it in ordinary conversation.

Each correct answer counts twenty. What is your score?

To the wildwood we came
At the song's invitation;
Its message renewing
The heart's inspiration.

2.
O the rythmical swing
Of that glorious lay
Which tells of a city
On India's bay!

3.
Both silver and gold
Play a part in this song,
Though no coins of the realm
To its love-notes belong.

4.
A soft lullaby
Soothes the infant to sleep,
While father's away
On the watery deep.

5.
With visions of "glory"
This battle hymn's replete;
Inspired by such strains
There can be no "retreat."

The answers with the names of all readers submitting a perfect score will be published four weeks from today.

Dodging a Debt Deadlock

THERE should be no premature alarm over the simultaneous reports from Washington that Congress will not postpone the French debt payment due December 15 and from Paris that the Chamber of Deputies will not appropriate funds for the payment. The deadlock has not arrived. And there is hope that it will be avoided. The statesmen of the United States and France can hardly permit the default entailed in such an impasse. For the damage would be vastly greater than from any hypothetical clash of an irresistible force and an immovable object.

Fears of a deadlock are based on the diametrically opposite positions taken by the two legislative bodies in the past and on current expressions of unwillingness to modify those positions. In approving the Hoover debt holiday last December, Congress tacked on a provision declaring it "to be against the policy of Congress that any of the indebtedness of foreign countries to the United States should be in any manner canceled or reduced." And the Chamber of Deputies when by a close vote it ratified the Mellon-Berenger debt settlement—and that was only three years ago—adopted an accompanying resolution declaring that payments to the United States could not be made "except through the regular accomplishment of the obligations of Germany." By the moratorium and the Lausanne agreement of last summer France is registering virtually no "accomplishment" in the collection of German obligations.

Dispatches from Paris and Washington indicate that the opinions of the lawmakers have not changed. But the status of intergovernmental debts has changed. They are harder to pay and harder to forgo. On the debtor's side there is not only a cessation of reparations income, but a decline in currency values which makes payments larger in terms of commodity values. And on the creditor's side economic stringency has reduced income from taxes and made payments relatively more useful in budget balancing. Thus compromise is difficult even on the comparatively small amounts now due.

However, default cannot be contemplated with complacence. It would injure the debtor's credit and cause grave financial and economic disturbances which could not fail to harm the creditor. And it would seriously damage international confidence and good will. President Hoover has been reported as convinced that default is not necessary. But default is not alone a matter of financial inability; it may also be a matter of political unwillingness to pay. French action may be ruled by popular feeling even as American insistence on payment is governed by public reluctance as much as by absolute financial necessity.

Thus a saving adjustment requires not only fiscal devices but shifting of opinion.

To the Monitor an extension of the moratorium has seemed wise and fair. But it appears now that controlling opinion in Washington opposes further postponement of payments. Undoubtedly one factor in this attitude is the apprehension that further delay would be a step toward ultimate cancellation. And apparently President Hoover, while believing that some revision would be helpful to the United States as well as Great Britain, France and the other debtors, feels that President-Elect Roosevelt should take the initiative in making any concessions either of time or amount, since his Administration would be charged with arranging the consequent adjustments in federal finances.

Possibly at the Hoover-Roosevelt conference next week some compromise, perhaps somewhat along the lines suggested a day or two ago by the Monitor's Washington correspondent, can be taken up. This plan would allow the debtors to make current payments into the World Bank pending action on their request for reconsideration of the settlements. It would obviate any threatened default and the difficulties of making payments in gold. And it would leave the United States still in position to ask for compensation through trade advantages or arms reduction.

A Public Servant Retires

THE retirement of Sir Malcolm Delevingne, who has just left the post of Deputy Permanent Undersecretary of State at the British Home Office after holding it nineteen busy years, removes from the stage one who has played a big part in international affairs since the war.

Sir Malcolm is best known for his work in fighting the international drug menace. Essentially practical in his outlook, he has sought by steady pressure on the conscience of officials throughout the world to draw a net around the drug smuggler through increased international administrative efficiency.

The process of tightening the net has seemed slow to some. But it has undoubtedly had good results. Better, perhaps, than would have been achieved had more spectacular methods been adopted before the world was ready for them. Sir Malcolm himself would be the first to admit that much still remains to be done. It is good news that his retirement will not prevent him from continuing to deal with the international side of the anti-drug campaign. Not only his experience, but his whole-hearted devotion to the cause for which he has done so much, are needed at Geneva.

There is another side to Sir Malcolm's work which is less widely known. He was largely responsible for drafting the articles of the Treaty of Versailles which form the charter of the International Labor Organization. The I. L. O. is not very much "in the news." Nevertheless, it plays a big part in molding the history of these times. By slow degrees, and with much compromise, it is gradually building up a common code of rights for workers throughout the world.

Sympathy Plus Reason

THE results of the presidential election lie in the lap of history yet to be made. "Now the nation can get back to work" is still, perhaps, an attitude of hope rather more than accomplishment.

Clearer than ever before, however, the voter sees that industry and business cannot afford to wait on Washington's plans for the future, wise though they may be. Whatever the future may have in store, the present demands intensive coöperation, collective and individual, and signs are not wanting that such coöperation is taking shape. Meanwhile, the needy are still with us.

In their behalf, Acting Mayor Joseph V. McKee of New York City went down to Wall Street on Wednesday and asked for the practical cooperation of the members of the Stock Exchange. Usually such requests are clothed in appeals to sympathy and philanthropy. The forthright Mr. McKee hung his appeal on another peg—insurance. Speaking of the estimated 900,000 New Yorkers who must, through no fault of their own, be aided through the winter, he declared.

> These men, women and children are not going to starve this winter, because we can't afford to let them. I ask you, looking at this problem from that viewpoint alone, to concern yourselves with this relief campaign. It is not only a great philanthropic act, but it is paying an insurance premium on the social policy of our time.

The quality of mercy is not strained because prudence raises her voice in behalf of the unfortunate and helpless. Viewed from the longer perspective, there is a fine altruism in doing one's bit toward preserving the harmony of social relationships. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that, as former Gov. Alfred E. Smith has said,

> This is everybody's problem—everybody who is able to give at all.

The economic and social conditions outlined by New York City's Acting Mayor are duplicated in greater or less degree throughout the world. His ringing call for coöperation in relief measures based on reason as well as sympathy may well be pondered by the thoughtful everywhere.

For everywhere the needy—victims of a system which they had no part in making—surround us.

Missouri Shows 'Em

IT IS on the tapis that a farmers' march may reach Washington when the short session of Congress convenes next month, but it is highly improbable that Clarence Goldsberry will be found in the ranks. He is just too busy.

Mr. Goldsberry is a 22-year-old Missouri farm boy who, while taking a five-year course in vocational agriculture, actually makes farming pay. Starting with a capital of $279 borrowed from his father, he has earned during five years $3303 and has accumulated a working capital of $2156. Nor is the achievement of this young farmer of the Missouri Ozarks measured only in terms of dollars. He has established a systematic crop rotation system which produces sufficient feed for his dairy herd and his hens are in the 300-egg class.

At the American Royal Livestock Show held in Kansas City, Mo., the other day, he was awarded the title of "the star farmer of America," together with $1000 offered by the Weekly Star, of Kansas City.

Congressional candidates hard put to it to think up new schemes for farm relief in speeches to agriculturists might do worse than cite young Mr. Goldsberry. Wearied by wrestling to reconcile higher prices for the farmer with no increased cost to the consumer, they might regard it a welcome change to mention the success of the man from Missouri who seems to have relied on the old-fashioned method of using his head and his hands.

Incidentally, somewhat of the point is taken away from the timeworn dictum, "I'm from Missouri. You'll have to show me." Clarence Goldsberry is doing the showing.

Democracy and Armies

BEHIND the military controversies on the Continent of Europe lies an issue which, when solved, will definitely smooth the path to disarmament. That issue rests on the opposition of two conceptions of an army. There is the conception of a national militia, and there is the conception of professional troops. While both types exist there can be no common yardstick. The French disarmament plan definitely prefers the general acceptance of the system of national militia.

The discussions have been particularly complicated because France and Germany have two different kinds of armies. The French army, although there is necessarily a professional nucleus, is essentially composed of conscripts. The German army is, on the contrary, purely voluntary.

But it must not be supposed that Germany deliberately chose the professional form of army. That form was imposed upon it by the Treaty of Versailles. At a peace conference in 1919 there were grave debates as to how the German forces were to be limited. A democratic army—that is to say, an army in which all the citizens are liable to serve—can hardly be restricted except by the size of the population. What was called a prætorian army—that is to say, an army which stands in some sense apart from the nation—can be circumscribed to any degree.

The British viewpoint, as represented by Mr. Lloyd George and his advisers, was that Germany should have a long-term voluntary army. This army was not to exceed 100,000. It was felt that by enforcing enlistments for a period of twelve years there could be no accumulation of trained reserves.

The French, though eventually they agreed with reluctance, were alive to the dangers of a professional army. It constituted, though relatively small, the framework of more popular armies, which could be quickly raised. Every man in the Reichswehr, experienced and efficient, could be transformed into an officer.

In France there has been a belief that the German army, numerically feeble, was in reality stronger than the French army. For the German soldier was taught his job thoroughly, while the French soldier, conscripted for a short term, merely acquired the rudiments of military instruction. Besides, there was to be set off against the indifferently trained French troops the unofficial formations such as the Steel Helmets and the Hitlerite contingents, which were voluntarily drilled and disciplined.

Thus there has been an equivocal situation, which, though not always acknowledged, has falsified the disarmament discussions. The French, who declared the treaty to be inviolable, secretly disliked the treaty in this respect. At the same time they chafed under Anglo-Saxon accusations of militarism because of their conscripts and their large reserves, when, in their opinion, their opposition to professional armies showed them to be opposed to militarism. Germany, on the other hand, protesting against inequality in military matters, and willing enough to revert to conscription, naturally did its best to make of the professional army, imposed upon it, a formidable instrument.

Another consideration has influenced the French. It has been affirmed that, without the existence of the Reichswehr, a military clique would not have been able to seize power in Germany. The professional army has put democracy in peril, according to the French Radicals and Socialists; for professional armies may succeed in creating a military policy. In short, it is argued that if one would have a democratic state, one must have a democratic army; the democracy must absorb the army, or the army will absorb the democracy. The Anglo-Saxon view, on the contrary, has been that conscription engenders militarism.

Which view is right? There is doubtless much to be said on both sides, but it may be said at once that, so far as land forces are concerned, for the first time since 1919 the more or less secret thoughts of European statesmen are revealed, and a real issue, which has stood in the way of disarmament, must now be faced.

Favorite Lines

MR. E. V. LUCAS, the well-known essayist, has recently disclosed which is his favorite line in English poetry. Many people, when asked to make a similar confession, become prosaically conventional, and choose something out of Shakespeare or Milton, more, one occasionally feels, from a sense of duty than of quick delight.

Not so Mr. Lucas. For his poetical pearl beyond price this distinguished critic goes to a writer no better known than Jane Taylor, choosing, from all the products of Parnassus that have given him pleasure, this line as his favorite:

> Impatient her little blue apron to fill.

Mr. Lucas has not made his choice without due thought. He admits that another line, "Before the bright sun rises over the hill," runs his first selection very close. But even so, the proud position of Jane Taylor is not challenged. For "Before the bright sun rises over the hill" comes from the same verse of the same poem as "Impatient her little blue apron to fill."

One suspects that Mr. Lucas has not selected these lines purely on their poetical merits. It is probable that a factor in his choice is the recollection of pleasant childhood days evoked by a poem that served as his first introduction to the world of literature. Indeed, one imagines that very few famous favorite lines chosen by the great owe their position of honor entirely to their literary deserts.

Gladstone's extreme approval of Wordsworth's "Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn" was doubtless partly due to the classical memories that it awakened; and it is very unlikely that Tennyson's opinion that

> Millions of rivulets hurrying through the lawn,
> The moan of doves in immemorial elms,
> The murmuring of innumerable bees,

would be one day counted among the most beautiful lines in English poetry (as indeed they already are) was altogether uninfluenced by the fact that he himself had written them.

As near an impersonal judgment as any is Swinburne's conviction that the most triumphantly beautiful English poetry is to be found in Keats's five great odes, the "Nightingale," "Melancholy," "Psyche," the "Grecian Urn" and "Autumn." Many sound judges would contend that the finest lines in English are from the first of these poems—

> Charm'd magic casements, opening on the foam
> Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn.

However tastes may differ, the reader of poetry loyally sticks to his particular favorite line rejoicing that "a thing of beauty is a joy forever."

Editorial Notes

One hundred years ago the London Observer recorded dire complaint by Londoners because of the immense number of omnibuses blocking traffic in Cheapside. One hundred years of traffic problems serve only to impress us moderns that though they are not new, their "infinite variety" is more likely to stall than stale.

The London Daily Express says that most of the large banks in Siam employ monkeys to help cashiers to detect base coins by the process of training the monkey to bite the coin to detect its true worth. At last we have found a monkey business that is a business.

A Franco-German accord is proposed for the purpose of building public works and providing employment. It might also serve the more important purpose of building friendship and causing useful unemployment—of fighting men.

Watching the World Go By

By WILLIS J. ABBOT

The Building Scrip Proposition Again

TWO men were talking in a New York hotel lobby. "Something seems to stand in the way," said one, " of the successful operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The country understood that it was created for the purpose of supplying credit for self-liquidating construction propositions—that is to say, enabling people desirous of undertaking promising business propositions which would give employment to labor, but for which the capital could not be found in their own communities, to secure that capital. The theory was that the banks either had not the money or were timid about lending it, so the Government would undertake to furnish it.

"Well, in our town is an educational institution, a college with almost half a century of successful operation behind it, with something over 5000 students paying tuition fees. This college owns a fine piece of land, and has a considerable sum of money at its command. It wants to put up a building and needs about $350,000 additional money for that purpose. It is now paying in rentals for property used by it more than enough to pay interest on that sum and provide for amortization. So it applied to the R. F. C. for a loan. The answer was that the corporation could not make loans direct, but only through banks or other fiduciary corporations. If the college board would get a bank to make the loan, the corporation would furnish the money. Accordingly, the chairman went with confidence to the bank.

" 'That's a real estate loan,' he was told, 'frozen credits! We can't touch it.'

" 'But it won't be your money. You'll get it from Washington.'

" 'We don't need to borrow from Washington, we've got plenty of money.'

" 'But you won't lend your own money. The R. F. C. was organized to meet exactly this need. If you won't make use of it, what good is it to the people?'

" 'Well, we won't. Besides, it hurts a bank for it to be known as a borrower from the R. F. C. We've got all the money we can use.'

" 'But not for a proposition that would give immediate employment to hundreds of men here, with an unknown number given jobs in producing building materials?'

" 'No, sir.' "

That, said one of the men talking in the hotel lobby, is an illustration of the way in which this plan for stimulating business does not work. When people trying to put a piece of construction like this under way get curt refusals, and read of loans of $90,000,000 to the Dawes bank and uncounted millions to railway companies and waterworks commissions, is it any wonder they are discontented and vote foolishly?

The other man set up the proposition that this has become a bankers' depression—that the hoarding of money in stockings and safety deposit boxes is unimportant, but that the timidity of bankers is transferring the hoards to their vaults. Nowhere are banks encouraging investment, either in established securities or in new enterprises. Obviously under such conditions there can be no rise in the stock market, nor any considerable expansion of business.

One danger in this situation, and a danger to which the banks themselves ought to be awake, is that it will further encourage propositions for the inflation of the currency, or for the extension of credit without the intervention of banks. Readers of these columns will recall the fact that some months ago I published, without indorsement, the outline of a plan by which the Government should issue scrip to persons desirous of doing constructive work or giving employment to labor.

In its simplest form this scrip would be a one-dollar note on one side, with fifty-two squares printed on the other. Every time the note was paid out, the payer would place a two-cent stamp in one of these squares, or if he held it more than a week he would affix such a stamp. It would be legal tender during its year of existence and at the end of the year would be taken up by the Treasury, which would pay a dollar in established currency for it. During its circulation the Government would have received $1.04 for the stamps necessary to validate it.

I have learned that in several small towns in the West this plan is now in effect. The municipality issues the notes and prints and sells the stamps necessary for their validation. No less an economist than Prof. Irving Fisher has been quoted as expressing approval of this method of performing a function which the banks very generally refuse to discharge. Let it be noticed that these notes are issued only to someone desirous of undertaking some constructive enterprise that would give employment to labor.

Suppose the Government should issue $200,000 of these notes to the college referred to. It would pay its contractors with them. They in turn would pay their workmen and the firms supplying materials. The notes would pass into general circulation, stimulating trade, giving a livelihood to workmen and ultimately producing a fine building for educational service. Everyone receiving and spending a note would, it is true, spend 2 per cent for its use; that is not wholly fair, not quite ideal. But perhaps it would be better than to have no money at all, no wages, no purchases of material and no building. And that is the situation which confronts that particular enterprise today.

When the Farmers Fought

The Populist Revolt: A History of the Farmers' Alliance and the People's Party, by John D. Hicks. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press. $4.

MR. HICKS'S study of a too-little-remembered phenomenon in American politics merits especial attention at the present moment, when the economic conditions which caused the Populist revolt of the last quarter of the nineteenth century are to a great extent paralleled. Cheap wheat, corn and cattle, dear money, high taxes and unjust marketing conditions, which drove the farmers then into revolt, all have reappeared. But nowhere in the United States is there apparent any organized political revolt among them. In great numbers they voted against the Administration in power, but not with any support of their own program or candidates.

The Populists in their day held national conventions, formulated political creeds and demanded reforms, many of which have found their way into statute law, and at least two of which are embedded in the United States Constitution. They elected representatives in Congress, senators, and even members of the electoral college. They converted the Democratic Party to many of their views, and supported its presidential ticket in two campaigns.

Was that their fatal error? In the end their party disappeared, while the Democratic Party continued, purging itself as rapidly as possible of Populist ideals. No one can read this book carefully without wondering what the result would have been had the Populists steadfastly refused to support Bryan in 1896. He would have been beaten, of course, but he was anyway. In that event, in 1900 the Populists might have been the second party in the nation, and the Democrats third.

No adequate history of the Populist revolt could be written by one wholly unsympathetic with its ideals. The present volume, while objective as befits a historical work, bears abundant evidence that its author comprehends the almost religious fervor with which this effort for the recovery of political rights was prosecuted. Nowhere has he fallen into the vulgar error of decrying the intelligence of its leaders, or echoing the cruelly malignant descriptions of their personal characteristics which so long disgraced the eastern press. Jerry ("Sockless") Simpson, Senator Pepper, Mrs. Lease, Ignatius Donnelly, General Weaver, are depicted in their true nature as described by those who knew and worked with them.

Will the United States witness another political uprising of the submerged classes of this character? It is hard to tell. It would have seemed that the present business recession, more enduring and vastly more cruel in its effect on the lives of its victims than that of 1892, would have resulted in some such political revolt. Yet nothing of the sort has occurred. A sharp shift from the conservative Republican Party to the almost equally conservative Democracy is the only result. Even the Socialist Party, although unusually well led, showed no result of popular discontent in an increased vote. I am not sure that the fact does not indicate a diminishing personal and political independence of thought among the American people.

Notes From Denmark

Swimming In the Moat

A POPULAR saying is that one can see Denmark in three days. But Danish authorities are planning ambitious development schemes for holiday resorts to attract foreign visitors for longer periods. An old fortress at Charlottenlund is being converted into a pleasure garden at a cost of 1,000,000 kroner, about $170,000. The moat surrounding the fortress is taking on a new lease of usefulness as a swimming bath. There will also be a large beach and a children's playground. Rows of small summer cottages, to accommodate two or more people, are to be erected in favorite sea-bathing neighborhoods. The town council of Helsingfors is to build vacation cabins on a proposed new beach near the castle of Kronborg. The sand for this beach will be pumped from the bed of the sound, as at Belle-Vue Strand, which was constructed two years ago. Dragør, near Copenhagen, is also spending 150,000 kroner in bringing its beaches up to date and in providing new attractions for holiday makers. These projects will also prove valuable in aiding jobless during the winter months.

Art For Shop Windows

Window dressing has become an especially live issue with many shops in Copenhagen following the opening of a decoration school. Experts can now be engaged from the school to arrange window displays in stores; while pupils are being instructed in the practical and artistic side of the work. It is felt that Danish store owners have much to learn from America in the art of displaying their goods to best advantage. There has been a tendency in the past to aim at putting a specimen of everything for sale into the window at once, instead of arranging a more artistic and less crowded display. Attention is also being paid to the construction of attractive panels to replace perishable articles. The florists have also opened a school for the teaching of flower arrangement, in connection with the Danish Flower Merchant Union, where pupils attend ten-week courses. Lessons in the arrangement of bouquets for various purposes, table decorations, and exhibition arrangements are included in the course.

Art Yields To Utility

Having two strings to its bow, the Royal Porcelain Factory of Copenhagen has kept its tall chimneys smoking through the economic depression. The factory found itself with a large stock of its beautiful porcelain on hand, but it was not too proud to take a temporary step down and start manufacturing sanitary fittings and a popular line in inexpensive crockery. Some 500 employees are now busy producing "iron" porcelain articles, which are remarkably strong and in consequence are popular with ocean liners and canteens. There is also a brisk demand for unbreakable stone for decorative building. The factory has no intention of ceasing to manufacture its famous Copenhagen porcelain, but is waiting for better times.

Fruit Sales By Auction

Denmark is following Holland's example of selling fruit and vegetables by auction. At Odense, Aarhus and Esberg, auction halls are already being used for the sale of home-grown products. Copenhagen is to have a Fruit Hall near the railway station fitted with cold and warm storage rooms, and packing machines. An auction clock will be installed, which will enable buyers to record their bids by pressing electric buttons, the figures appearing on the clock. All fruit will be standardized, so that, as in the case of graded milk and eggs, even the cottage grower will have an opportunity of competing with the market gardener.
